At least four file for council

Common Council needs to fill seat with Foster's appointment to Legislature

By Reba Lean

As of press time Jan. 5 there are four contenders for Seat B of the Nome Common Council. They are Jim West Jr., Betsy Brennan, Laura Lawrence and Tim Smith.

"I think I have a little different perspective to contribute to the council," Smith said. He feels that there are sources of income in the region that aren't being taken full advantage of, and there is a real need to diversify the economy.

Brennan thought that being a council member "would be a really neat opportunity." She's served on boards in the community in the past, most recently the Nome Public Schools Board of Education. "I love living in Nome, and I would like to be involved in the process of making decisions for Nome's future," she said.

Lawrence wanted to step up for the city when she heard the special circumstances surrounding the open seat. "I'm just looking to contribute to the community," she said. She feels she has a willingness to serve and help out.

West, a member of the volunteer ambulance service and fire department as well as the port commission feels that he has the experience needed for the council. While he doesn't have a specific platform, he says, "I'm pro-development," and says he would like to keep costs and taxes down.

The four prospective council members are proposing to replace Neal Foster, who is now a state representative, taking over his father, Richard Foster's, long-held position. He resigned from his city position in November, and his resignation was accepted at the Dec. 13 meeting. The last day available for submitting letters of interest for the open seat was Jan. 6.

Moving musk ox temper opening weekend harvest

By Tyler Rhodes

Perhaps the musk ox are wiser than we think. On a gorgeous opening weekend of the subsistence hunt for the shaggy creatures, few musk ox were to be found in the usual haunts close to Nome. "This is the first time that I can recall having hunters come in on a Monday morning unsuccessful," said Alaska Department of Fish and Game biologist Tony Gorn the morning of Jan. 4.

For many on the Seward Peninsula, the first days of the year are spent in the pursuit of musk ox with the opening of the subsistence hunt on Jan. 1. While harvest quotas were met in a matter of days last year, some portions of the 2010 winter hunt may take a little longer to be completed.

While harvest reports were still coming into the Nome ADF&G office on Tuesday following the opening weekend, the early numbers showed that less than half of the available quota was taken in the unit closest to Nome. Gorn said before noon on Tuesday that 12 of the available 34 musk ox in Unit 22C were reported to his office. In the subsistence hunt, successful hunters are required to report their kill within 48 hours.

Hunters who expected to find herds not too far west of the Penny River in Unit 22C over the weekend were treated to stunning and ex-

Restrictions lifted on who may receive H1N1 vaccine

Health Corp. has now lifted the restrictions on who may receive the vaccine. Previously, due to limited supplies, only those in certain priority categories were administered the shot.

Walk-in appointments are available from 1 p.m. to 4 p.m. Monday through Friday at the Nome Health Center. Two-thirds of the dosages are set to head to the villages, while about 500 will stay in Nome. "These should last a couple weeks, easily," said nurse Terry Romenesko as she opened her fridge at the Public Health Building.

This shipment is the largest Nome has seen yet, but it is not expected to be the last. Smaller shipments are scheduled in the weeks to come, and more dosages are readily available for ordering, Public Health Nursing Director Chris Kilby said. The dosages come to the hospital in multi-dosage vials or in ready-made shots. The ready-made shots are handy for sending out to villages where fewer dosages are needed.

Kilby recommends that children ages 6-10 receive two shots for better protection. If needed, appointments other than the scheduled walk-in times can be made by calling 443-3221.

A SHOT IN THE ARM—NSHC Public Health Director Chris Kilby gives Norton Sound employee Roy Agloinga his H1N1 vaccine Dec. 30. Increased supplies mean all are eligible for the shot.

Letters

Dear Nancy,

I recently watched a documentary called "Food Inc." The documentary was about where the food that we buy at our grocery stores actually comes from. Apparently things have changed quite a bit from the old days on the farms in the lower 48 states. The quaint little farms that I imagined my pork, chicken and beef coming from are no longer supplying most of the meat that we buy at our grocery stores here in Nome. In fact, almost all of the meat in the U.S. is now controlled by a handful of companies that force the farmers they employ to use "factory farming methods." I did some research on factory farming and found out that these methods could negatively affect our health. The animals raised on factory farms are fed antibiotics on a consistent basis that collect in the animals' tissues and milk. When we eat the meat, eggs or drink the milk from these animals, we lose our ability to fight certain strains of bacteria.

Not only do these practices negatively affect our health, they cause extreme pain and suffering to the animals that are raised in these factory farms, mainly chickens, turkeys, cows and pigs. According to the

A Grain of Salt

"There's a sucker born every minute" — P.T. Barnum

The old adage, "If it's too good to be true, it probably isn't," is a good rule to keep in mind and on a little card next to our computer. There are so many scam artists on the Internet that we need to keep constant vigilance to attempts to sucker us out of our money. The Queen of Africa's London solicitor is waiting for us to claim an inheritance, the Canadian drug companies want to peddle Viagra, the bank we do or don't deal with has a problem with our account, just let them know our account number ... Blah, blah, blah! Some Somalia pirates are trolling the Internet waiting to snag a few fish. One wonders how they get away with such bad grammar and poor spelling, yet they must catch a lot of gullible people. And folks really are gullible. The number of recent calls this newspaper had received asking about alien abductions is mind boggling. Callers insist it is true because they saw it on the Internet.

There are a lot of positive features about the Internet and it has a wide audience. However it is rife with lies and horse manure. There are amazing numbers of folks who put up blogs and web pages where the content is complete nonsense, untrue, inflammatory, hate-filled and just plain wrong. The truth is so limiting. There is no editor or newsroom to check facts and filter out the horse manure. Too many bloggers are fast and footloose with the facts and common sense has gone out the window.

So what can we do? Be a skeptic, ask questions, get educated, study logic and understand that banks and credit card companies never send you an email. So, make it a point in 2010 to be Internet smart and keep the salt shaker handy and the b.s. meter turned on. Don't get scammed. — N.L.M.—

ASPCA, a factory farm is a large-scale industrial operation that houses thousands of animals at one time. These factory farms confine animals to small cages with metal bars, ammonia-filled air and artificial lighting or no lighting at all (meaning no windows). They force breeding animals to produce young at unnaturally accelerated rates, causing exhaustion and stress. When the farm factories transport livestock to slaughter plants, sick or injured animals that fall or die on the way are forced onto slaughter trucks, often with a bulldozer. The ASPCA also states that the food companies employing these factory farms genetically alter animals' bodies to prevent them from acting out in aggression or anxiety caused by living in such extreme confinement.

In the documentary I watched the chickens they showed had been genetically altered to produce more white meat. The chickens grew at such an accelerated rate that their bones could not keep up with their rapid weight gain and they had trouble standing. Many fell and died in mounds of their own feces, long before the rest were taken to be slaughtered. The dead chickens were then recycled to be fed to other animals. Even the most minimum humane standards proposed in various states are stopped by the powerful food companies that have an oligopoly on the market. I believe that if we as human beings are responsible for bringing animals into this world, we should also be responsible for treating them in a humane way where they do not have to needless suffer, even if we are raising them for food.

I really love to eat meat, but after becoming educated about where it comes from, I have reservations about buying this meat from our grocery stores. However, there are things that we can do as a community to combat this problem. In my research, I found out about a non-profit organization called Humane Farm Animal Care. They are responsible for the Certified Humane Raised and Handled Program. The Certified Humane Raised and Handled program is a certification and labeling program that is the only animal welfare label requiring the humane treatment of farm animals from birth through slaughter. The goal of the program is to improve the lives of farm animals by driving consumer demand for kinder and more responsible farm animal practices. Their website (<http://www.certifiedhumane.org/>) states, "when you see the Certified Humane Raised and Handled® label on a product you can be assured that the food products have come from facilities that meet precise, objective standards for farm animal treatment." For more information please visit their website at <http://www.certifiedhumane.org/>. On this website you will find information about the specific requirements farmers have to meet in order to label their products as Certified Humane Raised and Handled.

Since becoming educated about this issue, I have been searching through every grocery store here in Nome for the Certified Humane Raised and Handled label. I found that Nome Trading Company carries "Ranger" chicken, beef and pork. I closely read the label and saw a note on the meat stating that it was humanely raised and handled. I would really like to encourage all of our grocery stores to carry meat and dairy products that have the Certified Humane Raised and Handled label, even if it is just a few items. I know that it may cost a little bit more, but I and others that I have spoken with are willing to pay a little extra in having the comfort of knowing that the meat we are buying comes from an animal that did not terribly suffer in its short and painful life. I would also like to encourage the restaurants in town to purchase meat and dairy products with the Certified Humane Raised and Handled label, even if it is only a few things. Every little purchase makes a big difference in market demand for these humane raised and handled products.

For more information visit the ASPCA Farm Animal Cruelty site at <http://www.aspca.org/fight-animal-cruelty/farm-animal-cruelty/what-is-a-factory-farm.html> or the Humane Farm Animal Care website at <http://www.certifiedhumane.org/>. Sincerely,

What does a board do?

I have been asked by several people, "What does a board member do?" I think this is a great question, and one that not only the general public doesn't always understand, but also one many board member themselves don't understand. I have served several boards ranging from our village and regional corporation to statewide non-profits. I have seen both effective and ineffective board members and I believe this makes a tremendous difference in how well a corporation performs.

It is said that the single responsibility of a board is to: create and build an effective organization. From my experience, a board member has five important duties and depending on the organization's current situation and history, some of these items will have more importance than the other:

1. Hire and fire the CEO as needed by the corporation.
2. Set strategic direction for management to follow.
3. Allocate resources, both human and financial.
4. Monitor performance. This role is often left out or skipped by most boards.
5. Provide a buffer for the CEO. A board must work as a team with the CEO and from time-to-time take the heat of both individual decisions by the CEO and strategic direction.

When a Board collectively fulfills these duties they provide a system of checks and balances by creating a process of participation from the board as a group. This adds judgment and protects the corporation and prevents an abuse of power, self-dealing, favoritism and just plain foolishness. Without this system of checks and balances, a corporation is dependent on the performance of the CEO and loses the collective wisdom of the group.

For these reasons a board is extremely important to building a better organization. This added layer of oversight may slow down decision making, but it will provide for stakeholder input and a much needed system of checks and balances. When a board is working collectively for the common good, it is an enjoyable and rewarding experience to be a part of the process.

Oil spills irk governor

Concerned that recent oil spills sully Alaska's reputation for responsible resource development, Governor Sean Parnell called executives at both BP Exploration and Alyeska Pipeline Service Company to give them a scolding. In December, two significant spills occurred at Prudhoe Bay and one in Prince William Sound on Christmas Eve. The spills in the Prudhoe fields contaminated several thousand square feet of snow-covered land.

In November, a spill of 46,000 gallons of oil, water and natural gas was reported. Officials also investigated another oil spill of about 7,100 gallons of water with oily residue. In Prince William Sound, a tugboat enroute to Valdez ran aground on Bligh reef and left a three-mile sheen of fuel oil on the water.

Parnell has asked the attorney general and commissioners of Environmental Conservation and Natural Resources to review these spills, and to make recommendations early in 2010 related to spill prevention and enforcement.

Parnell fights new EPA rule
The state of Alaska is fighting a new EPA rule that seeks to regulate greenhouse gas emissions under the Clean Air Act. The Clean Air Act is the law that defines the Environmental Protection Agency's responsibilities for protecting and improving the nation's air quality and the stratospheric ozone layer — one would think it would include the regulation of greenhouse gases.

On January 2, Parnell sent a letter to the Obama administration requesting that the Environmental Protection Agency halt its effort to regulate greenhouse gases under the Clean Air Act. The letter to EPA administrator Lisa Jackson said the proposed regulatory regime would have a detrimental effect on Alaska.

ALASKA News Briefs

Health care reform bill passed U.S. Senate

Alaska Senators voted along party lines when the Patient Protection and Affordable Care Act, aka new health care legislation, passed the Senate last week. U.S. Sen. Mark Begich, D-Alaska, said that he voted in favor of the bill because he didn't accept the status quo. "This legislation ends discrimination for pre-existing conditions; ends discrimination based on gender; makes it illegal for insurance companies to drop your coverage if you get sick; extends the solvency of the Medicare trust fund by an additional 10 years while cutting waste, fraud and abuse in Medicare; makes prescription drugs more affordable; requires insurance companies to pay for preventive care," said Begich.

U.S. Sen. Lisa Murkowski, R-Alaska, voted against the bill, taking offense to a price tag she pegs at $2.5 trillion and alleges that the bill was written in secret behind closed doors of the majority leader's office. Murkowski said, "I could not support legislation that would cause health care costs and insurance premiums to rise, as this bill does, according to the Parnell predicts that the rule would bury Alaska's businesses, institutions and the state's environmental agencies in regulatory burden. The letter also lets shine through Parnell's opinion on the current administration. He said he would continue to stand up against this unprecedented level of federal regulatory intrusion, which he said threatens jobs and economic development opportunities for Alaskans.

Congressional Budget Office. The CBO said that premiums for individuals without employer-sponsored coverage would rise between 10 and 13 percent, which in Alaska could affect up to 28,000 people."

Alaska Governor Sean Parnell also responded critical to the Senate's bill. He ordered the Alaska attorney general to review the legislation and requested the commissioner of the Department of Health and Social Services and the director of state/federal relations to update the state's policy analysis of pending health care legislation.

Parnell said, "Forcing citizens to purchase health insurance is not only bad policy, it may raise serious legal and constitutional issues." When Congress returns back to session, the House and Senate are slated to solve the differences between their respective health care bills.

Alaska's minimum wage increases

Starting January 1, Alaska's minimum wage increased from $7.25 per hour to $7.75 per hour. Despite the increase, Alaska is near the top of the highest cost of living list and other western states have higher minimum wages, such as Washington with $8.55, Oregon with $8.40 and California with $8.

Census to start in Noorvik
ANCHORAGE (AP) — U.S. Census Bureau workers are about to begin their 2010 count of Alaskans living in communities off the road system. The visits beginning Jan. 25 are earlier than the official national start because the census wants to catch rural Alaskans before spring breakup, when many head off to fish camps and other subsistence pursuits. Census Bureau director Robert Groves has said he will fly to Noorvik in northwest Alaska to get the count under way. The official start of the 2010 census is April 1.

pansive views with a full moon and cloudless skies. Despite the near-perfect conditions, those sweeping views often didn't include musk ox. "Hunters are benefitting from great weather; however, what they're not benefitting from is a much different distribution of musk ox groups from what we've seen the last five years," Gorn said.

That's not to say there were no musk ox being hauled back to Nome. Those who were willing to venture farther out were more likely to be rewarded for the extra seat time. In addition to the 12 harvested in 22C, nine were reported by early Tuesday from the Kuzitrin River drainage in Unit 22D and five from Unit 22B west of the Darby Mountains. Those portions of Units 22D and 22B each have a quota of 11 musk ox. In Unit 22D Southwest, near Teller, two cows were reported harvested by Tuesday morning. That area has a quota of seven animals, five of which can be cows.

As of early Monday, two of the four cows that were permitted to be harvested from the Kuzitrin were taken. No cows were allowed to be harvested in 22B or 22C. Nevertheless, Gorn said one cow was among the dozen musk ox reported taken in 22C. Several cows and calves were shot during last winter's hunt, either by a hunter misidentifying his target or the result of a pass-through shot that struck the intended animal and then continued on to hit another. Gorn said he had not heard of any other cases of taking the wrong sex or any cases of waste as of late Tuesday morning.

Gorn said of the animals being taken, it appears more younger, 2-to 3-year-old bulls are being selected by hunters. While mature bulls are easier to differentiate from cows by their pronounced boss horns—both male and female musk ox have horns—the older bulls tend to possess much tougher meat. As a subsistence hunt, current regulations call for the destruction of the horns on musk ox with a boss horn. Besides perhaps giving successful hunters better meat, Gorn said the taking of younger animals could also be seen as a positive in Unit 22C. "It does help preserve some of the mature bulls in 22C. We've definitely seen a decline in the mature bull-to-cow ratio," he said. "In that respect it's good to spread out the harvest in the different age classes."

While finding the musk ox may have been a bit more challenging this winter, once located, they are generally an easy animal to hunt. Unlike many big game animals that flee when approached, musk ox tend to form a circle for defense. Perhaps more than anything, successful hunters need patience to both identify their target and wait for a clear shot. "Even though it's been cold and windy [in past years], it's been a gentleman's hunt," Gorn said.

While out-of-area hunters have again traveled to the region for a chance to hunt musk ox, which in the past was only available through competitive drawing permits, Gorn said their numbers appeared to be fewer than last year.

This year's hunt is set up a bit differently than last year, allowing permit holders to hunt three different sub-unit areas under the same permit. Gorn said along with the scattered herds, he believes the permit change has been a factor in helping distribute hunters more widely across the available area. "We've seen more musk ox killed in the Kuzitrin," he said.

Also likely attracting hunters north of Nome was the opening of a moose hunt as well Jan. 1 in the Kuzitrin. While last year hunters were not allowed to possess both a musk ox and moose permit at the same time, that restriction was lifted this winter. Hunters holding both permits who headed north had more of a chance coming home with meat. As of late Tuesday morning, Gorn said two of the available 14 antlered bulls were reported harvested. Gorn said only one moose was harvested in the same hunt last year.

Another moose hunt in the region was closed Monday night by emergency order. The quota of five antlered moose had been met in Unit 22B west of the Darby Mountains. If the quotas are met in various musk ox and moose hunts in other areas of Unit 22, the Department of Fish and Game will close them as well by emergency order. Current hunting regulations and updated emergency closure information can be found by following links on the department's website at www.wildlife.alaska.gov. The department's Nome office can be reached at (907) 443-2825.

King bumps up Iditarod purse

It's a safe bet Jeff King wants some of his money back.

Following the Iditarod's December announcement of a $100,000 cut in the purse for the 2010 race, the four-time champion this week ponied up $50,000 of his own funds to help build back the prize money.

The Denali Park musher said in a press release that the donation was his way of giving back to a race that has given him so much. The gift was also made in hopes of spurring others to donate to the race that was hit hard by the loss of sponsorships.

King will be among those looking to get a portion of that purse when he points his sled toward Nome in early March for his 21st Iditarod.

State urges filing online for PFD

Don't wait for those thick Permanent Fund Dividend booklets to be stuffed into your post box as a reminder to file for the annual PFD.

The state's PFD division is now trying to cut down on paper applications and urges Alaskans to file online. The state's Permanent Fund Division last year decided to streamline the process. Division director Deborah Bitney said the paper booklets are not an efficient way to reach all Alaskans. The division plans to spend the money saved from sending out 450,000 of the booklets on a media campaign to reach Alaskans who haven't filed yet. Booklets will still be available at the Nome Legislative Information Office in the state building.

The first days of filing online for the 2010 PFD ended in chaos for Alaskans who wanted to donate portions of their PFD to charitable foundations under the Pick.Click.Give program. The link to Pick.Click.Give didn't work for some, others reported they were timed out before the long list of about 500 Alaskan organizations to choose from appeared. Bitney encouraged people to file their application online and try to use the Pick.Click.Give link during off-peak traffic times. The Pick.Click.Give program is administered by the Rasmuson Foundation. In Nome, the Bering Sea Women's Group, Kawerak and Nome Preschool are listed as charitable or educational organizations eligible for PFD donations.

The program is in its second year. Last year, 545,000 Alaskans donated some of their PFD via Pick.Click.Give. To file online for the PFD go to www.pfd.alaska.gov.

New Year's wishes for Nome

Nomeites speak up about changes they would like to see in 2010

Josie Bahnke

By Reba Lean

Josie Bahnke, Nome city manager

"I'd like to see the Public Safety Building completed and improved streets. I'd like to see a beautification committee that helps with spring cleanup, and helps with junk cars and houses. An anti-litter campaign with a good group of folks who want to help."

Mayor Denise Michels

"I'd like to see our port and harbor study expansion completed, secure more funding for alternative energy, move closer to getting a detox center, all of our roads paved, and see that the airport master plan is completed and fully funded, and that everyone has a great new year!"

Trooper Anne Sears

"I would like to see a sleep-off center for local inebrates on a more permanent basis. I'd love to see my diesel fuel bill go down, [and] that wind farm get going."

Trooper Andrew Merrill

"[I wish] people would stop double parking on Front Street!"

Trooper Aileen Witrosky

"Lower cost of living."

Ruth Emmons

"Businesses still need to make it accessible for people with disabilities – mostly the restaurants. [I'd like to see more] enforcing the ordinance for snow removal on the sidewalks. Also, I would use sidewalks if they were usable [in the winter], but they're not."

Rahnia Parker

"I'd like to see the health of Nomeites improve by fewer people smoking."

A look back at 2009

A sampling of headlines from the past year

By Tyler Rhodes

With the closing of the books on another year, The Nome Nugget takes the opportunity to look back on just a few of the events that made headlines this year in Nome and the region.

In the headlines

Nomeites learned a couple of iconic pieces of real estate in Nome are in danger of being lost to public enjoyment. Pilgrim Hot Springs was put on the block to satisfy financial obligations of the Catholic Bishop of Northern Alaska in the wake of sexual abuse claim settlements. The White Alice towers on Anvil Mountain just north of Nome are slated to be torn down in the future as the board of directors of Sitnasuak Native Corp. voted to have them removed before the property on which they sit is given to the Native corporation by the federal government.

Spring couldn't come fast enough for most Nomeites after a late-winter series of storms that pounded the region one after another for several weeks. At one point the near-record snowfall shut down streets, the airport and schools. The bountiful white stuff required that the city find extra funds to cover budget shortfalls due to all the manhours and equipment needs to remove the snow.

The news at the Rock Creek Mine outside of Nome was mostly no news. Mine owner and operator NovaGold maintained the same line all year that it would continue to mull the prospect of restarting the idled open-pit gold operation north of Nome.

Nome's Junior Reserve Office Training Corps. program received two life lines from Sitnasuak Native Corp. in the form of two $100,000 donations. The donations, made through a state tax credit program, have kept the JROTC program functioning in the wake of both the city and school district declining to fund it in the face of budget cuts.

Volunteers frustrated with seeing too many perish on the streets during Nome's cold winters came together and formed the Nome Emergency Shelter Team. Operating out of the Nome Nazarene Church, the group managed to run a shelter when temperatures dipped well below 0° F starting in March and resuming again in November. Since the NEST shelter started operating, no one has frozen to death on Nome's streets.

Farewells

In 2009, Nome lost two of its iconic citizens and leaders. Legendary Seward Peninsula businessman and Board of Trade owner Jim West Sr. died Oct. 1 at the age of 82. For 50 years, West called Nome home, running and profiting from myriad ventures.

Fewer than two weeks later,

Nome would again lose one of its favorite sons with the passing of Rep. Richard Foster Oct. 13. He was 63. Born in Nome, Foster rose to be one of the region's greatest advocates and leaders in state politics, serving in the House for nearly 21 years.

Memorial services for both men filled the Nome Recreation Center.

Changing of guard

Nome and House District 39 will again be served by a Rep. Foster after Neal Foster was selected by the governor to serve out his late father's term in the Legislature. Foster, along with Ralph "Weaver" Ivanoff and Sam Towarak Sr., were selected by a local committee as potential replacements for Rep. Richard Foster who died in October. Neal Foster was sworn in by Lt. Gov. Craig Campbell in Anchorage on Nov. 16.

On May 7, one of Nome's own took over the leadership of Norton Sound Health Corp. After serving as interim president and chief executive officer of the health care organization since February, the board of directors officially gave Carol Piscoya the job. Born and raised in Nome, Piscoya had previously served as the health corporation's vice president of community health services.

Nome received a new police chief with the arrival of John Papasodora this fall. Papasodora accepted the position, replacing interim chief Dallas Massie who held the post since early 2009 after Paul Burke's departure. Both Papasodora and Massie are former Alaska State Troopers.

Nome Elementary School students were welcomed by a new principal this fall as Shari Biscotti started her first year as the school's leader. She replaced the retiring Carl White.

The Nome Board of Education saw some shuffling as its president, Gloria Karmun, resigned during the summer to pursue employment with the district. When the two candidates to replace her, Joel Alowa and Lynette Schmidt, tied in evaluative scoring by the remaining board members, it was up to a coin toss to decide who would serve. Fortune favored Schmidt that evening and she served all the way up to a run-off election in the fall when she ultimately lost the seat to Heather Payenna. In the initial election in October, Karmun made a return to the board, replacing Betsy Brennan. Karmun eventually was voted in again as president.

In April the board named Jon Wehde as the district's new superintendent, replacing Rick Luthi who retired after one year at the helm.

Gail Schubert assumed a new role at Bering Straits Native Corp., sharing leadership responsibilities with the regional Native corporation's president, Tim Towarak. Having served as BSNC's general counsel and executive vice president since 2003, Schubert was named chief executive officer in early December.

After leading Nome's Native corporation in an interim status since the spring, Trudy Sobocienski was officially named the president and chief executive officer of Sitnasuak Native Corp. in the summer. Sobocienski was appointed interim president and CEO after Robert Fagerstrom left the position. Fagerstrom or other company officials never did say why the change in leadership occurred.

Visitors

The World, a luxury cruise ship in which its well-heeled passengers own their suites and condominiums, paid a visit to Nome this summer. The ship travels the globe with its residents boarding and leaving as they please.

Sen. Lisa Murkowski, Gov. Sean Parnell and what seemed like at least half of the Alaska State Legislature visited Nome in 2009. Many of the Legislature's members were in Nome this fall to pay their respects to the late Rep. Richard Foster. Sen. Murkowski spent a half day visiting the hospital, schools and the public in the fall. Gov. Parnell came to make the announcement that he had selected Neal Foster to fill his late father's shoes in the Legislature.

The U.S. Coast Guard paid a long and busy visit to Nome in August, staging the majority of its Arctic Crossroads operation out of the Gold Rush City. The exercises brought boats, aircraft, personnel and military and government officials to the area to train and assess the area's available resources and needs.

Several ships and their crews passed through Nome's port on their way to or from the Northwest Passage. Among those was the Ocean Watch, a vessel attempting to circumnavigate North and South America while promoting ocean conservation. As of press time, the vessel, which started its journey in Seattle, was in Argentina.

Victory and defeat

Those lining the chute leading up the Burled Arch were treated to a familiar scene in March as Lance Mackey made his third victorious charge up Nome's Front Street in the 2009 Iditarod. After three wins in a row, Mackey is now permanently etched in the history books of the 1,000-mile race from Willow to Nome. Mackey's win came as he put all challengers out of contention by braving his way through a windstorm that left most of the field either well behind or stalled out in Shaktoolik. Besides the win, Mackey also took home the race's most coveted prize, the Alaska Airlines Leonhard Seppala Humanitarian Award for the musher who gives his dogs the best care.

... Before the four-legged dogs make their way to Nome, the Iron Dogs first have at the trail. This year, riding a pair of Polaris Dragons, Todd Minnick and Nick Olstad won the world's longest snowmachine race in record time, edging the Ski-Doo team of Tyler Aklestad and Tyson Johnson by just 3 minutes, 18 seconds. Nome marks the race's halfway point. Nome's Mike Morgan placed an impressive fifth in his first year racing the Iron Dog.

... And if racing across Alaska by snowmachine or dog team doesn't impress you, Tim Hewitt's perseverance and determination must. The Pennsylvania endurance runner took the title in this year's Iditarod Trail Invitational race. Traveling by foot in oversized running shoes, the lawyer covered the 1,000-mile trail in 25 days, finishing in Nome shortly after midnight. Out of the eight attempting to make it to Nome, only one other finished, Italian Marco Berni. Berni also walked the trail to Nome, finishing a few days after Hewitt.

... It would seem unusual if the Seward Peninsula were to see a year go by without someone trying to traverse the Bering Strait by one odd method or another. More often than not, the attempts call for the unlucky adventurer or adventurers to be plucked from the frigid sea by rescuers. Such was the case this year for Jean-Gabriel Chelala, a French citizen attempting to circumnavigate the globe under his own power.

Chelala had already paddle-boated across the Atlantic and biked from Florida to Alaska before making his attempt to kayak across the Bering Sea and continue his journey through Asia. Suffering from hypothermia, Chelala was hoisted from the sea by a Coast Guard helicopter over the July 4 weekend.

Another traveler met nearly the same fate a few days later. Norwegian Audun Nordhus was rowing his boat near Little Diomede when weather blew him off course. Nordhus had started his journey in Teller July 3 with both his craft and supplies looking to be no match for the waters in which he was about to journey.

After being lifted from the churning Bering Sea by helicopters, both were taken to Nome. Chelala went on to continue his voyage, arriving in Paris Dec. 12. Nordhus went home to Norway soon after his rescue.

HEADS UP—Jeremy Head of the Nanooks is up for a dunk in a game against the Kotzebue Huskies in the Anchorage Christian School tournament on Thursday.

Nome notches big wins, one loss in Anchorage

The Nanook boys basketball squad rang in the new year by blasting their way past their hosts to claim a win in the consolation bracket of the Anchorage Christian School Tournament Jan. 2.

Led by Jeremy Head's 32 points, 19 of which came in the first quarter, Nome handily dispatched the Lions in a 77-49 game Saturday night. Tim Sullivan and Christian Leckband also put up double-digit efforts, each scoring 13 to contribute to the win.

The Nanooks' route to the consolation game was handed to them by perennial challenger Barrow on the first day of the year. The Whalers jumped out to a 22-7 lead in the first quarter. Despite narrowing the gap, Nome was never able to regain the ground in the 66-57 loss. Head again led the Nanooks with 23 points and 10 rebounds. Leckband notched 11 points in the game where he saw little play time due to foul trouble. The loss was Nome's first of the year. Last season, Nome edged out Barrow to take the regional conference title.

The Nanooks started the tournament with the subtlety of a hurricane, plowing over Kotzebue in a 91-20 victory Dec. 31. Head scored 30, Leckband added 16 points and Derek Weiler scored 12. The Huskies will be bracing for the Nanooks' arrival in Kotzebue this weekend for a set of games Friday and Saturday.

Trip to Anchorage nets Lady Nanooks one win

The Lady Nanooks basketball team rang in the new year with three days of hoops in the big city during the annual Anchorage Christian School tournament.

Nome with 1 for 3 in the holiday tournament, bested the host's junior varsity team while falling to Petersburg and Valdez.

The Lady Nanooks started off on the right foot Dec. 31, taking an eight-point lead into the locker room against Valdez. The Lady Bucs, however, came back strong, outscoring Nome 28-11 in the second half to grab the 46-37 win. Hillary Stiles led the Nanooks with 13 points, backed up by Richelle Horner who chipped in 11. The charity line proved to be a stumbling block for the Lady Nanooks as they were only able to score 7 point on 24 free-throw attempts.

Nome's first game of the new year also came up a loss as Petersburg outscored Nome 41-32. Devynn Johnson led the Lady Nanooks with 11 points while Stiles added 8.

The Lady Nanooks were able to finish the tourney on a positive note as the team came together to best the ACS JV squad 46-40. Johnson again notched 11 points and grabbed 18 boards to lead Nome. Iris Warnke-Green gave a double-digit effort with 10 points and Renee Lammer added 9. The win improved Nome's record to 2-3.

The Lady Nanooks will play at home this weekend, hosting Kotzebue Friday and Saturday.

JUST THE BEST—Karen Erickson prepares a batch of her renowned cinnamon rolls for Kuupiaq (Coffee) House customers in Unalakleet. Freshly baked muffins and cookies, espresso beverages and smoothies also draw regular patrons and visitors to the coffee shop, opened in March 2008 by Karen and her husband, Karl.

Cinnamon rolls and kuupiaq in Unalakleet

By Laurie McNicholas

Karen Erickson's cinnamon rolls are twice the size of most, with a home-baked texture and flavor rarely found in a restaurant or bakery. They draw eager customers to her new business in Unalakleet—Kuupiaq (coffee) House.

"I usually go through two dozen cinnamon rolls a day when I make them—at least twice a week," Karen said. They are available with or without frosting. "I carry muffins, cookies, sometimes donuts too, all made from scratch," she added.

Karen concocts her customers' favorite hot espresso beverages, including lattes, cappuccinos, breves, sludges, americanos and mochas. She also offers frappachinos, a blend of coffee, ice and milk; and smoothies, concentrated fruit flavors blended with ice.

Kuupiaq House is located in a small building in midtown near the post office and across the street from the Unalakleet Schools and offices of the Bering Strait School District. A small dining area with a couch and two tall, round tables, each with three stools provides limited seating. Customers pick up their orders at a counter between the dining area and kitchen.

A few regulars come in and sit, but we receive call-in orders from the school district and frequent customers in town," Karen said. Groups of hungry high school students pop in from time to time. She also prepares baked goods to order for meetings and other special events.

"We started business in March 2008 at the start of the Iditarod Sled Dog Race," Karen recalled. "We were so busy." Later that year Kuupiaq House won a Small Business Initiative grant of $14,500 from Norton Sound Economic Development Corp.

Karen's husband, Karl, an Alaska State Trooper, sometimes mans the Kuupiaq House counter during his off-hours. Both were raised in Unalakleet but lived for years in other communities where Karl served as a Trooper—Anchorage, Glennallen, Soldotna and Kotzebue.

"We've been back in Unalakleet only four years," Karen noted. "It's nice to come home. Our kids love it." Their kids are daughter Katiya, 17, a senior at Frank A. Degnan High School; and sons Donald, 15; Kadyn, 10; and Kael, 5. Karen said Katiya and Donald often run the coffee shop when she and Karl are not available.

Karen hopes to expand Kuupiaq House in the future. "I would love to make it into a soup and sandwich and chili spot," she said.

Coffee: how healthy is your morning cup?

Bob Lawrence, MD
Alaska Family Doctor

If you are drinking a cup of coffee while reading the paper today, pour yourself another cup. This ancient beverage is likely good for your health.

Most people know coffee provides a temporary boost in mental acuity and energy, primarily due to caffeine. Research over the last 20 years shows that coffee consumption may also have long-term health benefits. At higher doses, coffee reduces a person's risk of acquiring type II diabetes, Parkinson's disease, liver cancer, colon cancer, and dental cavities. Sometimes coffee is used to treat migraine headaches and even asthma.

The most recent research on coffee involves its effect on prostate cancer. Men who drink coffee have a lower risk of acquiring an invasive form of prostate cancer, according to recent data reviewed by a group of Harvard epidemiologists. These scientists followed a cohort of 50,000 men over 20 years and found that men who consumed more than 36 ounces of coffee daily lowered their risk of acquiring invasive prostate cancer by 60% compared with men who do not drink coffee.

Thirty-six ounces per day, about 6 small cups, seems to be the dose of coffee at which researchers find the greatest long-term health benefits. For example, according to research out of the Harvard School of Public Health published in the Annals of Internal Medicine in 2004, one to two cups of coffee a day will lower a person's risk of developing type II diabetes by a few points, but at 6 cups a day, men reduce their risk of type II diabetes by over 50 percent, and women who drink six or more cups a day lower their risk by nearly 30 percent. Decaffeinated coffee has beneficial effects as well, but the effect is much less profound compared to caffeinated coffee.

Despite the positive research, doctors are reluctant to recommend daily coffee, especially at higher doses, out of concern for coffee's harmful effects. Coffee can exacerbate symptoms of gastritis or gastric ulcers, especially in smokers. Higher doses of coffee are associated with a slight increased risk of osteoporosis in women; (though this effect is mitigated by a glass of milk daily).

Coffee's effect on the cardiovascular system is mixed. Coffee causes a small elevation in cholesterol levels and can strain an unhealthy heart by temporarily increasing the heart rate and blood pressure. These harmful effects are balanced by the positive effects of heart-healthy antioxidants, which are highly concentrated in coffee. According to research published in the journal Circulation early in 2009, coffee consumption is associated with a lower risk of stroke in otherwise healthy individuals. The American Heart Association has found no clear adverse effects to moderate coffee consumption defined as one to two cups per day.

It is important to point out that the healthy aspects of coffee do not overcome the unhealthy ingredients in many specialty drinks. Saying that coffee makes a double tall mocha healthy would be like saying that apples make apple pie good for you. In both cases any health benefits are purely social.

Taking your coffee black may sound old-fashioned, but when consumed daily, drinking your coffee plain or adding only a little milk likely offers the greatest benefit to your health. Of course you can still have fun with the order. Ask for a "single tall skinny drip without the whip" and be well.

Nomeites appointed to state boards

Governor Sean Parnell reappointed Randy Romenesko to the Denali Access System Advisory Committee.

The committee advises the Denali Commission on surface transportation needs in Alaska Native villages and rural communities, including projects to build essential access routes from the road system to villages and communities, and advises the Commission on transportation planning among Alaska Native villages.

Romenesko is a longtime arctic engineer, who now works as an engineering consultant with tribal and local government clients. He worked for the city of Nome as city engineer from 1995-2000, and as city manager from 2000-07. He was the Northwest Alaska district engineer for the Alaska Department of Environmental Conservation from 1990-

95, and a civil engineer in construction and government projects across Alaska from 1983-90.

Romenesko earned a bachelor's degree in civil engineering from Marquette University, and a master's degree in civil engineering from Northwestern University. He is a state-licensed civil engineer and Alaska-registered professional engineer. He was appointed as a representative of an Alaska Native regional corporation, non-profit, or tribal government.

Parnell also appointed Laura Samuelson to the State Historical Records Advisory Board. The board is responsible for reviewing grant requests from historic, archival, research, governmental and academic organizations, and helps plan for statewide records management needs. Samuelson has been director of the city-owned Carrie M. McLain Memorial Museum since 1997. She has previously worked in Nome as a state public assistance eligibility technician from 1992-97, construction office manager from 1991-95, and administrative officer for the state transportation department from 1988-91. She also worked in public relations for Inspiration Gold, Inc., as shareholder relations director for Bering Straits Native Corp., and in various positions for The Nome Nugget newspaper.

Samuelson earned a bachelor's degree in economics from Western Illinois University, and belongs to many professional organizations, including the Nome Historical Foundation, Museums Alaska and the Alaska Association for Historic Preservation. She sits on the board of directors of the Alaska Historical Society. She was appointed to a local government records seat.

HOROSCOPES

January 7 - 13, 2010

	Fantastic, Capricorn. Sticking to your resolutions is easy with the help of a friend. A business deal is sealed. Invite your pals over to celebrate.		Your reality of a situation at home sinks in, and you resolve to make amends. Start with that special someone, Aries. An e-mail piques your curiosity.		Project plans get put on hold due to a shortage of funds. Don't despair, Libra. A better opportunity will arise later. A meeting brings you a powerful ally.
	Way to go, Aquarius. Your proposal is well received. Drama ensues at home with the arrival of guests. Don't worry, though. Things will work out in good time.		Make a wish, and it just might be yours. Yes, Taurus. Magic is in the air. A venture into the unknown turns up something all too familiar. Stick to your guns.		Rework your budget, and financial worries will give way. Really, Leo. You will find a way to make every dollar count and then some. A romantic retreat may be in order.
	Travel plans get underway. Bon voyage, Pisces. A risky move at work pays off big. Share your success with others. Freedom at home comes at a price.		You're too clever for words, Gemini. A relative has no idea what you are up to. Make sure they will appreciate your surprise before you present it.		The tide changes at home, and you must rise to the occasion. Step up, Virgo. A neighbor makes a request. Take the time to hear them out.
	Ooh-la-la, Scorpio. Romance blooms at home. Make the most of it. A riveting tale motivates you to set some goals and see them through.		Uh-oh, Sagittarius. Trouble looms, but thankfully, it does not involve you. A relationship deepens, while a business venture flourishes. Celebrate the good times.

Karen Anaqua Mae

Iya

May 28, 1959 – December 2, 2009
Anaay was born May 28, 1959 and raised in Savoonga by Nathaniel and Cora Iya.

Anaay loved living in Savoonga and lived with whom she called Muffy her "Mom." She had a passion for Eskimo Dancing and excelled in dancing so much that the audience would start to get excited even before she began to dance. The singers loved to sing for her.

She enjoyed eating traditional food and loved storing food. She was a Teacher-Aide at the Hogarth Kingeekuk Memorial School for many years because she loved working with children. When Qemiq was born, she automatically adopted him as her son. Their bond was always visible and very enjoyable to watch.

Anaay helped to raise Ukaaka, Koni and Barry. She baby-sat a lot of other nieces, nephews and other children. She loved playing cards, especially "Sniitners," watching movies, reading books or riding around on a four-wheeler with Qemiq and teasing her friends. Anaay made an extra effort to make sure you knew her because it was meant to be a friend for life; thus the teasing was always present.

Anaay is survived by sister Agnes Immingan and brother James Iya, Jeanette "Muffy" Iya and her family, Gordan Iya's family, Davis Mokiyk and family, Veronica Iya and her family, nephews Joseph, Jr., Jason, Jade, Barry and niece Bernadette as well as many other nieces, nephews, and numerous relatives and friends.

She was preceded in death by her parents Nathaniel and Cora Iya, brothers Harvey, Edgar, Gordan, Joseph Sr., and Matthew Iya; her sisters Elizabeth and Joan.

Anaay had many other relatives in Gambell, Nome, Anchorage, Portland, Michigan and other points beyond. She had friends from Barrow to Juneau, and Boston, MA to Portland, Oregon. Qemiq said that she is our guardian angel now and will always be close to our heart.

Qemiq (and family) would like to express our gratitude and thanks for all who helped in the time of our need, for your prayers, comfort, food, flowers and especially your support. God Bless you all.

We all thank everyone for cards, food, flowers, spiritual and physical donations (making casket and cross). Your thoughtfulness has made a difference in the sorrow our family felt.

Thank you for remembering her.
With all our thanks and God Bless!

Muffy, Jason, Joe Jr., Ukaaka, Qemiq (Anaay's son), Koni and Barry Iya.

James Minor Walsh

James Minor Walsh, born in Nome on December 22, 1916, died December 14, 2009 in Seattle. He was fourth of 10 children born to Michael Walsh and Louise Forsythe Walsh. Jim received his BA from the University of Alaska in Fairbanks, and taught elementary school in Nome and Seldovia, interrupted by his enlistment in the US Army.

Following the end of WWII he returned to Alaska, where he met and in 1946 married Elizabeth Petry, his beloved Betty. They celebrated their 62nd anniversary in October 2008, and she passed away the following February.

Jim worked as station manager for Pan American Airways in Nome, and later in Ketchikan. During these years 10 children were born to the couple. In 1966 the family moved to Seattle where Jim continued to work for Pan Am until his retirement in 1977.

For the next several years, he worked for a variety of travel organizations and for Alaska Magazine, writing several articles and consulting on a book about Nome. His work enabled him to explore the world and it was a delight for him to be able to share this opportunity with his family. Soviet Russia, China and Afghanistan were only a few of the countries he visited.

Jim's life was one of profound dedication to his family and his community. He was active in the Chamber of Commerce, the Irish American Heritage Club, rotary, Alaska Yukon Pioneers, and the Democratic party, helping to nominate John Kennedy at the 1960 national convention. He loved learning, he loved language, and above all he loved a good story. True adventures from Alaska's remarkable history, tall tales from poet Robert Service, and shaggy dog stories. Jim recited them all with relish and a twinkle in his eye. "Top o' the morning" greeted all who called, day or night. And he sang constantly. From working as a volunteer fire fighter to playing Santa for the neighborhood kids, to preparing food for a church dinner for the needy. Jim was always ready to pitch in, and never forgot to count his blessings.

Jim is survived and remembered lovingly by his sisters Eileen Taylor, Noreen Wills, and Kay Farley, his children Mary T. Jones, Elizabeth A. Walsh (Jim), Nora L. Walsh, J. Timothy Walsh (Diane), Eileen F. Walsh (Gee), C. Erin Walsh (Mike), James D. Walsh (Kathy), Michael B.

Walsh, Joan C. Campbell (Bruce), Thomas A. Walsh (David), his grandchildren Jennifer (Dan), Matthew, Seamus, Andrea (Chris), Caitlin, Brigid, Kyle and Christopher, and his seven great grandchildren. Grandson Jaron passed away in 1999.

Funeral Mass was celebrated Monday, December 21, at 10:00 a.m.

at Blessed Sacrament Church. Remembrances may be made to the Blessed Sacrament Feed-In, SVDP 5050 8th Ave. N.E., Seattle, WA 98105, University of Alaska Foundation, P.O. Box 755080, Fairbanks, AK 99775-5080, or your local Food Bank.

Saying it Sincerely

By Fr. Ross Tozzi
St Joseph Catholic Church
For the Nome Ministerial Association

If you want to cultivate peace, protect creation

Grace to you and peace from God our Father and the Lord Jesus Christ. (Romans 1:7). The start of a New Year is a time when many make and soon break New Year's resolutions. In the Catholic Church, the start of a new year is a time when we gather to pray for world peace. The tradition began in 1968 when Pope Paul VI, the Bishop of Rome, invited the world and not simply Catholics to pray for peace.

Forty-two years ago, Paul VI explained that threats to peace include selfishness, violence, weapons of mass destruction, the spending of national resources for swords rather than plowshares, and the failure to use reason to settle international differences. In the past four decades we have seen progress in world peace, the collapse of the Iron Curtain, the end of apartheid in South Africa, and peace in Northern Ireland. Sadly, other conflicts rage on and new ones abound. As the young men and women of our region and nation continue to patriotically serve in harm's way in Afghanistan and Iraq, we readily recognize the need to continue to pray for world peace from the traditional threats.

For 2010, Pope Benedict has chosen the theme, If You Want to Cultivate Peace, Protect Creation. He explains, "seeing creation as God's gift to humanity helps us understand our vocation and worth as human beings. With the Psalmist, we can exclaim with wonder: "When I look at your heavens, the work of your hands, the moon and the stars which you have established; what is man that you are mindful of him, and the son of man that you care for him?" (Ps 8:4-5). Contemplating the beauty of creation inspires us to recognize the love of the Creator, that love which "moves the sun and the other stars"."

God has blessed us richly and entrusted the earth to us as stewards. Certainly as stewards of the Seward Peninsula, there is much that we can do:

- Local efforts of the Banner Wind Farm and the desire to offer this technology throughout the region offer great promise. Reduced energy bills and a decreasing reliance on diesel cannot help but protect our local share of creation.
- Mining offers needed jobs for today. Environmentally sensitive mining provides for the stewardship of the land and its preservation for generations to come.
- Cleanup of the PCB contamination at the old U.S. Air Force site atop Anvil Mountain has been a longstanding concern. Will the contamination threat from our recent past, help us to be more thoughtful as we build for tomorrow?
- For thousands of generations, local hunters and fishermen have shown great care for God's creation as they provided for their families and the local community. The values and skills of past generations carefully taught, accepted, and passed on cultivate peace and help to care for creation.

Each January 1st is the official World Day of Peace. Gathering on one day to pray for peace is not enough. Peace is a prayer that should resonate in our hearts and minds all year long.

NOTICE OF PUBLIC HEARING

The public is invited to participate in the development of State of Alaska's SFY2011 Consolidated Housing and Community Development (HCD) Annual Action Plan, and the SFY2011-2015 five-year HCD Strategic Plan.

The Annual Action Plan and the five-year Strategic Plan are prerequisites to receive federal funding for the Community Development Block Grant (CDBG) Program, the Emergency Shelter Grant (ESG) Program and the HOME Investment Partnership Program (HOME).

The geographic areas covered by Alaska's Annual Action Plan and the Strategic Plan are all areas of the State except Anchorage. The five-year strategy (SFY2011-2015) will be adopted in 2010. The five-year strategy provides general principles and priorities and is implemented by a series of one-year action plans. The SFY2011 Annual Action Plan is the first annual implementation plan of the five-year strategy.

This second public hearing will be held:
Thursday, January 14, 2010,
4:00 – 6:00 p.m.
Alaska Housing Finance Corporation
Board Room (AHFC)

4300 Boniface Parkway,

Alaskan refiners caught price gouging

A legislative research report shows that price gouging by Alaska's refiners has continued and that the refiner margin in Alaska is twice the national average. The Legislative Research Services Division report conclusively shows that price gouging by Alaskan refiners has continued unabated. Sen. Bill Wielechowski, D-Anchorage, estimates that refiner price gouging has cost Alaskans over $189 million. Wielechowski said that during the last legislative session legislators were assured by a Tesoro representative that Alaskan gasoline prices were merely lagging behind those of the lower 48, and that they would soon come down. The newly released report's charts show that the refiners have continued to jack up the price of gas, although the price of crude oil has gone down. The refiner margin is very roughly the profit earnings, plus some costs, for a refiner. Tesoro and Flint Hills Refiners provide virtually all the refined gasoline for Alaska, with Tesoro dominating the gasoline refining, with over 80 percent of the market.

According to the American Automobile Association, Alaska still has the highest gasoline prices in the nation today. When the price of oil spiked in the summer of 2008, Alaskan refiner margins exploded to $1.45 per gallon by October 2008, while the Washington and US average refiner margin peaked at 60 and 63 cents, respectively, in September 2008. In November 2008, the Washington and US average refiner margins hovered at around 10 cents per gallon, while Alaska's refiner margin remained over 10 times higher, at $1.17 per gallon. As the Legislature debated price gouging bills over Tesoro's and Flint Hills' strong objections, the refiner margin difference narrowed.

Taking the historical averages, Wielechowski estimates that Alaskans have been overcharged an average of 54 cents per gallon. He pushes for passage of Senate Bill 54, which would outlaw price gouging on gasoline and other fuels in Alaska.

AT&T grants BSSD $50K toward dropout prevention

The Bering Strait School District has received a $50,000 grant from AT&T to help fund drop-out prevention programs. The funds come from a four-year, $100 million national commitment by the company to fund high school success and work force readiness initiatives.

Bering Strait was one of two districts in the state to receive the $50,000 gift. The Anchorage School District netted the other grant. "This significant donation from AT&T will go a long way toward helping at-risk students graduate and go on to a successful work life or higher education," said BSSD Superintendent Jim Hickerson in a press release.

The funds are part of AT&T's Aspire program, which includes grants to schools and nonprofits, student job shadowing, national research and community dropout prevention summits. "The success of our youth affects us all—from the students themselves to our need for an educated workforce," said Mike Felix, president of AT&T Alaska. "With this program, we're helping Alaska school districts look for ways to encourage students to stay motivated to graduate and to see how their choices today can lead to better futures."
