Sen. Olson uninjured in plane crash

By Tyler Rhodes

Sen. Donny Olson was able to walk away from a plane crash Sept. 15 near the top of King Mountain a few miles north of Nome.

Olson was the pilot and only occupant in his Cessna 310 at the time of the incident. A press release from the Alaska Senate Bipartisan Working Group released the same day described the incident as "a controlled landing on the tundra north of Nome in bad weather." The release said Olson was uninjured in the incident and was medically cleared by a doctor. The brief release noted that it would be Olson's only public statement regarding the matter.

Larry Lewis, an air safety investigator with the Alaska Region of the National Transportation Safety Board, said he was still compiling information on the incident before he could report any findings. "It takes a few weeks to get it all together and draw some sort of conclusion," Lewis said Sept. 21.

Lewis was able to say that Olson had been in radio contract with approach control as he was attempting

56ers blur lines between grades

By Tyler Rhodes

With just 30 minutes of school left before the start of the weekend last Friday, nearly all the fifth and sixth graders at Nome Elementary School were busy doing anything but staring at the clock.

In one room, students darted about the classroom putting the final touches on their scale models of King Island. Next door was a bit calmer as young painters worked on water color landscapes while visiting artist Bill Brody circled the room checking out their progress. On the other side of the pod of classrooms, a chorus of voices chimed away while teacher Ian McRae led the song "Waltzing Matilda" on his guitar. As the time neared to go home, teacher Kelly Thrun and a group of students returned to the pod after a field trip to the Norton Sound Seafood Products plant.

The flurry of activity in the corner of the building felt like a departure from the normal school day. But Fridays—and the entire school year, for that matter—in the fifth/sixth grade pod are designed to be different.

Prior to this year, just like in the grades leading up to their final years

Letters

Dear Editor:

Just the other day I was perusing the fine vegetables at Hansen's Grocery when I looked up and saw one of the more Christian ladies of good-old Nome approaching up the aisle with her grocery cart. I was about to extend my warm greetings when out of nowhere one of these half-pant j-wearing teenbots strode between on a mission of self-embarrassment unequaled on the face of the human earth. Why, when Miss Nitinbocker's eyeballs caught sight of this disgusting slipshoddiness, I could tell by the look on her face that she considered this young man to be a completely pure form of useless varmint.

Many kids and young adults, who for lack of self-esteem, common sense, and good parenting, copy each other without the slightest questioning of why they do what they do.

The practice of wearing your pants three-quarters of the way down your bottom comes from the prison system. I got this information right from Billy Bob's condensed but corrected version of Prison Etiquette 101. It states (When you become the sexual property of a male prisoner you must wear your pants 3/4 of the way down your bottom. This lets other male prisoners know that you are owned by another man.)

So. All you young whippersnappers...you are really showing off your brainpower now. For the parents of these young folks, since when is it OK to let your children go out half-dressed in clothes that make it impossible to move quickly if need be? Why don't you as parents do us all a favor and start at the bottom. From what I can see you can only go up.

Dear Editor,

I would like to correct information from Tyler Rhodes' article, "NSEDG spurs entrepreneurs with $105,00 in seed money," from last week's Nugget. While Mr. Rhodes correctly identified Inniaguktuna, meaning "I want to visit," as an Inupiaq word, he was mistaken to claim that it also means, "let's talk." The subtitle for my new publication is "Let's Visit." Thank you.

Consistency

What's good for the goose is good for the gander. If a law is to be enforced, it must be enforced equally across the board— no favoritism or special deals. In Nome we have to maintain a sense of humor, but sometimes the outcome is not very funny. If we stop to think too hard, it may do brain damage.

It's nice to see the speed control trailer on the south side of Seppala. It shows how fast we're going as we approach town. The flashing speed numbers are above a big sign stating a 25 mph speed limit. On the north side of the street, just across from the 25 mph sign, the posted speed limit is 30 mph. If folks are in a hurry to get to the airport they may have noticed the "speed zone ahead" sign as they bear to the north at the airport loop. Don't waste time looking for the speed zone— it isn't to be found. We have "no parking" signs near the port on the west side across from Larry's Auto. Apparently customers park their vehicles there and the City fears these cars and trucks could leak oil onto the port parking area. The big trucks parked on the east side of the port apparently are not a concern. Parking is a problem, but not for City Hall. Folks visiting and working at City Hall have been parking City and private vehicles on the vacant private lot across from City Hall for several years. Don't try to figure why it is OK for the City to use private land for parking near City Hall, but not OK for residents to park along city streets by the port. ( See photos pages 2 and 9.)

These situations are petty, for sure, but if a law is to be enforced, it must be enforced equally for everyone, and that includes the City itself. — N.L.M.—

State of Alaska in the news

Compiled by Diana Haecker
Murkowski launches write-in campaign

Defeated by Tea Party Express-endorsed Republican Joe Miller in the GOP primary, U.S. Sen. Lisa Murkowski announced after a week of suspense that she decided to launch a write-in campaign. She made the announcement last Friday at the Denaiiana Center in downtown Anchorage. Throughout the weekend, Miller and Murkowski were attacking each other on national television. Murkowski said on CNN's show "State of the Union" that Miller is an extremist when it comes to budget cutting. She said he is suggesting radical things like dumping Social Security, Medicare and cutting down the Department of Education. Miller fired back during a news show on Fox and accused Murkowski of being out of touch with Alaskan voters. Miller argues that states rather than the federal government should handle assistance programs that are not directly listed in the constitution. As Alaska's Republicans and Republican congressional leaders embraced the new Alaskan nominee Joe Miller, Murkowski told the AP that she feels as if Republican leaders have turned their backs on her as she mounts a write-in bid to try to hold onto her seat.

Democratic nominee Scott McAdams of Sitka said that his campaign is not going to focus on the opponent, but to campaign on issues like job creation, education and how to keep Alaska's share of federal investments.

Write-in campaigns are only seldom successful. In Alaska, nobody ever come out on top running a write-in. However, there is precedent of trying to do so. In 1968 Democratic Senator Ernest Gruening's was defeated in the primaries by Mike Gavel and then set out to run as an independent write-in candidate. Gruening gathered 17 percent of the vote, placing him third in the senatorial race.

Inspired by Murkowski's decision, Republican Bill Walker is considering joining the gubernatorial race as a write-in. His campaign manager, Taylor Bickford, told The Associated Press the landscape has changed significantly with Friday's announcement by U.S. Sen. Lisa Murkowski that she would run as a write-in in an effort to keep her job. AP reports that Bickford says Walker has received an outpouring of support and is seriously considering re-entering the gubernatorial race. Walker finished second to Gov. Sean Parnell in last month's GOP primary. Walker focused on his plan to build an "all Alaska" line, arguing it provided the best alternative to getting a line built and providing a market for Alaska gas.

Fish and Game commissioner Lloyd announces sudden retirement

Alaska Department of Fish and Game Commissioner Denby Lloyd told Fish Radio in Kodiak that he plans to retire on December 1. Lloyd was arrested in downtown Juneau last month and charged with driving under the influence of alcohol and reckless endangerment. His departure as head of the state's Dept. of Fish and Game will come just before he is scheduled to appear in court on Dec. 6. The governor's spokeswoman confirmed that Lloyd is going to retire but didn't link it to the ongoing court case against him.

NEA-Alaska endorses Berkowitz for Governor

Democratic nominee in the gubernatorial race Ethan Berkowitz scored a significant endorsement as the Alaska chapter of the National Education Association decided to support his candidacy. NEA's president Barb Angaiak said that this is the group's first gubernatorial endorsement since 1998. During an appearance in front of the union's interview committee, Berkowitz voiced support of early childhood education and benefits programs for public employees. According to Angaiak, Republican candidate and incumbent Sean Parnell was invited, but could attend the NEA interview.

Summer 2010 third lowest sea ice extent

While sea ice is slowly growing back for the winter season, the National Snow and Ice Data Center reports that on Sept. 10, the sea ice extent seemed to have been at its annual low point and dropped to roughly 1.8 million square miles.

The 2010 minimum ice extent is the third lowest recorded since 1979. The record low was in 2007; the second record low year was 2008. The data center's numbers show that 2010 marked only the third time in the satellite record that ice extent has fallen below 1.93 million square miles and that all those occurrences have been within the past four years. The minimum for 2009 was 1.97 million square miles, the fourth lowest in the satellite record.

Although the melting season started late, the ice extent declined rapidly with record daily ice loss rates for the Arctic as a whole for May and June. Assuming that we have indeed reached the seasonal minimum extent, 2010 would have the shortest melt season in the satellite record, spanning 163 days between the seasonal maximum and minimum ice extents.

At the 2010 seasonal minimum, ice remained fairly extensive in the East Siberian Sea, compared to 2007, when this area was ice-free. 2010 ended up having less ice than 2007 in the Beaufort Sea and in the East Greenland Sea. Both the Northwest Passage and Northern Sea Route were open at the 2010 sea ice minimum, whereas in 2007, ice blocked part of the Northern Sea Route.

Marine Fisheries Commission to help commercial fishermen to compensate for their losses due to the Yukon River Chinook salmon fishery disaster over the last two years. The commission is supposed to distribute the money and new nets to commercial fishermen affected. In 2008, the commercial salmon harvest was 89 percent below the five-year average, and the fishery remained closed through 2009. Secretary of Commerce Gary Locke declared a Yukon Chinook salmon fishery failure last January.

Mountain and ice field to be named after Stevens

U.S. Sen. Lisa Murkowski introduced legislation to honor the late Senator Ted Stevens by naming a mountain and part of an ice field after him. The proposed Stevens Peak, known as South Hunter Peak, is located in Denali National Park. At 13,895 feet, the mountain is the tallest unnamed peak in Alaska. Murkowski has also proposed naming the northern half of the Chugach ice field after Stevens — the southern and western portions of the field already being named for Harding and Sargent. The legislation requires the U.S. Geological Place Names Board to christen the peak and ice field within 30 days of its passage. Stevens died in a plane crash near Dillingham on Aug. 9 and has served 39 years in the U.S. Senate representing Alaska.

NANA invests in the film industry

Just as Alaska is setting the stage for the feature motion picture Everybody Loves Whales that is being filmed in the state, NANA Development Corp. wants a slice of the action and signed a partnership agreement with Anchorage-based Evergreen Films. Helvi Sandvik, president of NANA Development Corp. said that she is excited about being involved on the front end of the development of a new industry in Alaska. The Alaska Legislature has created a film production incentive program to lure film productions to Alaska.

Evergreen Films CEO Mike Devlin said that British Columbia has a film and TV industry worth $1.2 billion and supports about 20,000 jobs. Devlin's goal is that Alaska surpasses these numbers in ten years. Evergreen Films is an independent film production studio headquartered in Anchorage with a complete 3D production and post-production studio. It also has a production facility in Los Angeles.

Evergreen also is in partnership with BBC Earth to produce a 3D dinosaur feature film and has a deal with Alaska mystery writer Dana Stabenow to produce a television series based on Kate Shugak, a character from Stabenow's novels. The series is currently in development to be produced in Alaska for a global television audience.

Small business legislation passed Senate

The U.S. Senate has passed a bill Democrats say will benefit small businesses. It cleared the Senate last Thursday on a vote of 61 to 38, with Democrats and two retiring Republicans supporting it. U.S. Senator Mark Begich, D-Alaska, voted "yes," his colleague Sen. Lisa Murkowski, R-Alaska, voted "no". The House must still pass the bill before it becomes law, but it's expected to do so easily next week. The aid package includes $12 billion in tax relief for small businesses, and $30 billion in loans that would go to community banks to give new loans to small businesses.

Alaska gets money for adopted foster children

The U.S. Department of Health and Human Services paid out $719,213 to Alaska to help increase the number of children adopted from foster care. According to DHHS, states receive $4,000 for every child adopted beyond their best year's total, plus a payment of $8,000 for every child age 9 and older, and $4,000 for every special needs child adopted above the respective baselines. The year 2007 is the baseline for Alaska. Once a state receives adoption incentive dollars, it is free to use the money on anything related to adoptions. This is the third year in a row that Alaska has received these adoption incentive funds. The state's Office of Children's Services received $224,000 in 2009, and $194,000 in 2008.

ACEP funded for wind-diesel energy research

The Alaska Center for Energy and Power at the University of Alaska Fairbanks has received a $3 million grant from the Department of Energy to optimize wind-diesel hybrid energy systems in rural Alaska. Alaska is already home to several systems pairing wind turbines with diesel power plants like Kotzebue and Nome. However, many are not performing as designed due to Alaska's extreme weather and remote, distributed grid systems. The money is to be used to resolve technical issues, long-term energy storage and better control systems to deal with the fluctuation of wind power. ACEP is leading a team of researchers from both UAF and UAA, including engineers, economists, natural resource scientists and experts on the social issues of rural Alaska. The project will include partnerships with the Alaska Energy Authority, the Denali Commission, the Renewable Alaska Energy Project and national laboratories. The grant is part of the DOE's experimental program to stimulate competitive research.

Norway and Russia agree on new offshore boundary

MOSCOW (AP) — Russia and Norway signed an agreement last week on their maritime border in the energy-rich Barents Sea, ending a dispute that has dragged on for decades. Russian President Dmitry Medvedev and Norwegian Prime Minister Jens Stoltenberg said after the signing that the deal would strengthen stability in the region and enhance economic cooperation between the two neighbors. "We have been trying to reach this agreement for 40 years," Medvedev said after his talks with Stoltenberg in Russia's Arctic port of Murmansk.

Stoltenberg praised the deal as sending a signal to the world about the region. NATO member Norway and Russia failed to agree on a maritime border in the Barents Sea during the Cold War and difficult talks dragged on following the 1991 collapse of the Soviet Union.

Interest in the Arctic region has intensified amid evidence that global warming is shrinking the sea ice, opening up new shipping lanes and opportunities to explore rich oil and gas deposits. Russia claims a large part of the Arctic seabed as its own, arguing it's an extension of the country's continental shelf. In 2007, scientists staked a symbolic claim by dropping a canister containing the Russian flag onto the seabed from a small submarine.

The United States, Canada, Denmark and Norway have also been trying to assert jurisdiction over parts of the Arctic, which is believed to contain as much as a quarter of the Earth's undiscovered oil and gas. Medvedev said Russia is wary of NATO's presence in the Arctic region. "Russia is watching such activities with serious concern," he said. "It's a zone of peaceful economic cooperation, and a military factor would raise additional problems."

2010 PFD is $1,281

By Tyler Rhodes

Nearly 641,600 Alaskans will be see an extra $1,281 headed their way in the coming weeks.

Gov. Sean Parnell announced the 2010 Permanent Fund Dividend amount at a Sept. 21 press conference. The first dividends will be paid out by direct deposit on Oct. 7. More than 530,000 applicants will see the deposit arrive directly in their bank accounts. Approximately 85,000 Alaskans will be mailed a check. After the initial Oct. 7 distribution, the next round of direct deposits and direct mailings will occur beginning Oct. 28.

The dividend nearly matches last year's amount of $1,305 that was given to every eligible man, woman and child in the state. The 2008 dividend topped the $2,000 mark at $2,069 and was made even fatter with an additional $1,200 payment labeled as a "resource rebate."

The total distribution made to Alaskans through the PFD this year will top $821 million. Alaskans who have received each PFD will have now been paid $32,194.59 over 29 years. That figure does not include the $1,200 resource rebate of 2008. Overall, the state has paid out a total of about $18.2 billion through the 29-year PFD program and the one-time resource rebate.

Unlocked cars are taken for joy ride

In the early morning hours of Monday Sept 20, three vehicles were stolen from local residences in Nome. One of the vehicles was subsequently involved in a motor vehicle crash, damaging the stolen vehicle as well as the vehicle of another resident.

Though all three vehicles were eventually located and recovered, investigation indicates that all three were taken after the owners left the keys in the ignition and the vehicles unsecured.

With the days getting shorter and colder temperatures, people are looking for places to shelter and to get from place to place without being exposed to the weather.

The Nome Police Department is actively investigating these thefts and has developed suspects. However, the police need your help in curbing reports of theft and damage to your property.

1. Please remove the keys from your vehicle and lock the doors. Thieves are less likely to bother with a secure vehicle, then one that is an 'easy' target;

2. Report any suspicious activity immediately to the police. Even though the activity may be found to be harmless, it is always better to know. We are here to respond to your needs.

3. Secure your personal items and don't leave them laying about where someone can take them. This includes locking up your bicycle, gas cans, or other items that someone might want to take.

The Nome Police Department appreciates your help and cooperation.

Residents want profiles to reflect importance of subsistence

By Laurie McNicholas

An opportunity to shape descriptions of Bering Strait communities for inclusion in a revised edition of Community Profiles for North Pacific Fisheries-Alaska drew about three dozen participants from throughout the region to a workshop Sept. 10 in Nome.

The workshop was one of six regional meetings conducted in Alaska this year by the Alaska Fisheries Science Center, National Marine Fisheries Service, which published the first version of the profiles in December 2005.

Only four of 15 Bering Strait communities—Elim, Nome, Unalakleet and Shaktoolik—are included in the 2005 edition, a thick volume profiling 136 fishing communities throughout the state. The criteria for selecting communities to profile focused on the highest involvement in marine fisheries, especially commercial fishing.

The document is used primarily for environmental impact statements (EIS) developed by government entities. “It is the first place to go for background information for the North Pacific Fisheries Management Council (NPFMC) committees, academics, students and NMFS employees,” said Christina Package, a social scientist with the Pacific States Marine Fisheries Commission who helped facilitate the meeting.

In recent years an EIS was developed for a NPFMC management plan to reduce the bycatch of king salmon in the Bering Sea pollock fishery. An EIS currently is in preparation for a NPFMC management plan to reduce chum salmon bycatch in the pollock fishery. The NPFMC also is developing a management plan for the Northern Bering Sea Research Area, which includes the Bering Strait region. Residents of western Alaska communities have become acutely aware of the importance of the EIS process in developing management plans for industrial fisheries that affect their communities.

“The profiles should include not just subsistence activities, but the importance of them.”

— Julie Raymond-Yakoubian, Kawerak Inc.

Workshop participants said information about subsistence uses of marine resources such as marine mammals and seabirds should be included in the profiles. They pointed out that some communities have little or no involvement in commercial fisheries. “Subsistence data is really important to our communities,” said Julie Raymond-Yakoubian, a social scientist with Kawerak Inc. “The profiles should include not just subsistence activities, but the importance of them.”

Tim Smith of Nome suggested including all 65 communities in the Western Alaska Community Development Quota Program in the profiles. The CDQ communities receive a share of the total allowable catch in various Bering Sea/Aleutian Islands fisheries, so they are involved in industrial commercial fisheries whether or not they participate in local fisheries. Fifteen CDQ communities in the Bering Strait region are members of Norton Sound Economic Development Corp.

“Adding subsistence criteria to the selection method is suggested a lot,” Package said.

Frank Oxereok of Wales said his village is more dependent on subsistence than anything else. “You need to come to each community and talk to the IRA (tribe),” he added. “You have to be out there to understand. Your decisions impact us out there.”

“We are trained as social scientists to do things that way, but we won’t get the funding,” replied Dr. Jennifer Sepez, an Alaska Fisheries Science Center anthropologist who is leading the effort to produce an updated edition of the community profiles document. “If we were to do it that way, we could [profile] only 10 to 15 communities.”

Oxereok and other workshop participants noted that communications capabilities such as access to the Internet are limited and uneven in villages. A majority indicated that a paper copy of the profiles document is more useful to them than a compact disc or online version.

Sandra Tahbone of Nome asked Sepez who decides the selection criteria for profiling communities.

“I do, in collaboration with graduate students from the University of Washington,” she replied. “We hope to add University of Alaska graduate students.” Lopez expressed interest in adding each CDQ community to the 2011 edition of the profiles. However, when pressed to estimate the total number of communities in the revised edition, she said it may be limited to 150 profiles depending on budget constraints.

Noting that results of the 2010 Census will be finalized in mid-2011, Sepez said the revised edition of the profiles will be completed by June 2012 at the latest. She sought assistance from workshop participants to identify data banks for information such as the cost of living and subsistence use in communities. She also listened to their stories of diminishing marine resources and problems in dealing with regulations and regulatory agencies that prioritize the commercial and sport uses of fisheries resources over subsistence uses.

Small group discussions of the descriptive structure of the community profiles produced numerous recommendations for deleting, adding and refining the categories of information they include. Sepez assured participants they will have additional opportunities for input to the 2011 edition, including the review of draft profiles.

Sepez reported that the AFSC has received replies to requests for information from only 15 percent of 296 tribal entities, Native corporations and other entities in Alaska. “We invite someone to sponsor a videoconference with us, especially because we got little information back,” she said.

Following the workshop, attendees received an invitation by e-mail to participate in a conference call to summarize input for the 2011 edition of the community profiles gathered at regional meetings. The conference call will begin Sept. 30 at 10 a.m. Alaska Daylight Time. The toll free number to call is (907) 789-6622. No code is needed to access the call.

Crab, salmon fisheries conclude in Norton Sound

By Jim Menard, Alaska Department of Fish & Game

The final fish tickets are coming in from the buyers, and the Alaska Department of Fish and Game is preparing season summaries following closure of Norton Sound’s commercial crab and salmon fisheries.

The commercial crab harvest of 417,304 pounds resulted in the biggest payday since Norton Sound went super-exclusive in 1994, creating the small boat crab fishery of today. This year’s price per pound of $3.73 was the highest ever paid, and the ex-vessel value of the crab fishery was $1,527,971. Only the big boat crab fisheries of 1978 and 1979 had higher paydays with an ex-vessel value of $1.9 million for each year. The red king crab harvest totaled 2.1 million pounds in 1978 and 2.9 million pounds in 1979.

Salmon fisheries

Rising water levels in the second week of September prevented the counting tower crews at the North River and Kwiniuk River from counting salmon in murky waters, so the projects were pulled.

Preliminary harvest totals for this year’s salmon fisheries are 120 kings, 91 sockeyes, 31,826 pinks, 117,054 chums and 62,412 silvers for 113 permit holders. The chum harvest ranked 18th highest and the silver harvest ranked 12th highest. The ex-vessel value was $1.15 million.

Unalakleet subdistrict

Preliminary commercial harvest totals for the Unalakleet subdistrict are 107 kings, 30,598 chums, 10,364 pinks, 62 sockeyes and 33,319 silvers for 58 permit holders.

The Unalakleet River Test Fish project operated by ADF&G with assistance from Norton Sound Economic Development Corp. (NSED) ended on Sept. 5. Catches were 44 kings, 2,041 chums, 897 pinks, six sockeyes and 468 silvers. The silver harvest ranked ninth highest.

The North River tower escapement goals are 1,200-2,600 kings; no goal established for chums; 25,000 pinks; and 550-1,100 silvers (aerial survey goal). This project was operated by NSED with assistance from ADF&G and ended Sept. 7. The cumulative counts were 1,230 kings, 15,995 chums, 151,224 pinks and 7,569 silvers. Silver counts were one-third below the 10-year average.

Shaktoolik subdistrict

Preliminary commercial harvest totals in the Shaktoolik subdistrict are four kings, 39,822 chums, 5,365 pinks, 17 sockeyes and 11,811 silvers for 34 permit holders.

Norton Bay subdistrict

In the Norton Bay subdistrict, the preliminary commercial harvest totals are 6,020 chums, 2,597 pinks, 7 sockeyes and 1,606 silvers for five permit holders.

Elim subdistrict

Preliminary commercial harvest totals in the Elim subdistrict are seven kings, 23,630 chums, 11,620 pinks, three sockeyes and 10,179 silvers for 19 permit holders.

Escapement goals at the Kwiniuk River tower are 300-550 kings; 11,500-23,000 chums; 8,400 pinks; and 650-1,300 silvers (aerial survey goal). This was an ADF&G project with assistance from NSED, and it ended Sept. 7. Cumulative counts were 135 kings, 71,388 chums, 634,220 pinks and 8,049 silvers. The silver count ranked 8th out of 10 years.

Golovin subdistrict

In the Golovin subdistrict, preliminary commercial harvest totals are two kings, 16,984 chums, 1,880 pinks, two sockeyes and 5,497 silvers for nine permit holders.

Nome subdistrict

Aerial surveys in the second week of September showed silvers were still moving into rivers of the Nome subdistrict, and the silver salmon subsistence catch limit was waived.

Subsistence set gillnet fishing was open seven days a week in the marine waters and subsistence fresh water areas. Beach seining is not allowed.

The escapement goal at the Nome River weir is 2,900-4,300 chums and 13,000 pinks (even-numbered year). This ADF&G project is operated with assistance from NSED. The cumulative counts through Sept. 10 were nine kings, 5,793 chums, 165,102 pinks, 43 sockeyes and 4,074 silvers.

High water gouged holes beneath the weir in early morning hours of Sept. 8, and some silvers probably made it upstream without being counted. The silver count ranks fifth highest. The average 90 percent point past the weir is Sept. 9.

The escapement goal at the Snake River weir is 1,600-2,500 chums.

This is a cooperative project between NSED and ADF&G. The cumulative counts through Sept. 10 were 43 kings, 6,982 chums, 51,029 pinks, 120 sockeyes and 2,119 silvers. High water gouged holes beneath the weir in early morning hours of Sept. 8, and some silvers probably made it upstream without being counted. The silver count ranks fourth highest. The average 95 percent point past the weir is Sept. 7.

Port Clarence district

Salmon Lake will remain closed to salmon fishing to protect spawning sockeye salmon.

Kotzebue district

The commercial salmon fishery closed Sept. 3. Preliminary harvest totals are 271,002 chum salmon by 68 permit holders.

School district fills out ranks, hires JROTC instructor

By Tyler Rhodes

It appears Nome Public Schools has reached the finish line in its long quest to hire a senior instructor for its Junior Reserve Officers Training Corps program.

The Nome Board of Education approved the hire of James Doll Sept. 14 to fill the position that has remained vacant since the departure of Maj. Gary Grennon after the 2008-2009 school year. At that time Nome's JROTC program was terminated due to a lack of funding.

Diligence by the JROTC cadets, shrewd maneuvering by Superintendent Jon Wehde and the financial generosity of Sitnasuak Native Corp., however, brought the program back online for the next two school years. The program has run without a senior instructor since last year under the direction of Kevin Knowlton. Without the senior instructor, the program was operating under probation and was set to lose its sanction at the end of this year.

In recommending the hire of Doll to the board Sept. 14, Wehde cautioned that the funding to cover the position was not set in stone beyond this year. Other hires approved that evening for several positions were approved by the board in an earlier motion. Due to the salary concerns, Wehde recommended the JROTC position be handled separately. "This is the most unusual recommendation for hire that I will be making that I can conceive of," he said. "Other positions approved were part of this budget."

Wehde said donations given the district to cover the costs of the JROTC program will provide for the instructor salary this year. "We have nothing to fear for FY'11, therefore I recommend hire approval for James Doll," he said.

Wehde said he would be presenting a plan to the board at a future meeting to cover the funding beyond the current school year. The board approved Doll's hire by a 3-0 vote. Board members Gloria Karmun, Kirsten Timbers and Barb Amarok were present at the meeting while Barb Nickels and Wilma Osborne were excused.

Other hire approved by the board were Dr. Jane Barclay, elementary/junior high special education; Megan Fowler, early elementary special education; Victoria Ketchum, Title I math teacher; Sherrie Harvey, social worker; Lorlie Schield, Alaska Native program coordinator.

Principals' reports

High school principal Steve Gast informed the board that students were able to participate in butchering a portion of moose, learning different meat cuts and how to take care of the meat. A group of students also went on a fishing trip and learned to fillet and cook their catch.

Gast reported on working to develop dual-credit classes at the high school in conjunction with the University of Alaska Fairbanks Northwest Campus. He said some vocational classes already qualify for dual credits.

Gast said he would like to see a credit-recovery program start in the second semester for students who are falling behind. He said the program would be designed to give students an opportunity to catch up during the school day. Such a program should help reduce the school's dropout rate, he said.

The principal also reported on the junior high's three days of team-building field trips. He said he went along with the trip for one of the days and was encouraged to see some of the kids open up and develop confidence during the activities.

Gast said that the mentoring and club programs at the high school will continue this year. Gast said administrative intern Kris Busk, who is also a junior high teacher, will work to give the mentoring program a little more focus and direction.

Principal Dave Keller at Nome Elementary School highlighted the new hires at his building. In addition to those whom the board approved later in the meeting, Keller said Whitney Pong joined the staff as a reading aide.

Keller happily reported that the heat had finally been turned back on in the school as the boiler replacement project neared completion. "We have heat," he said. "There were about 10 days that we didn't, but the kids were great and it worked out just fine." He thanked the crew that worked late nights to finish the project. He noted that with the heat now on, the roadwork surrounding the school was the new challenge to be overcome.

Keller said the Nome Eskimo Community tutoring program was getting underway for grades 1-4. He noted the new fifth and sixth grade program, dubbed the 56ers, has its own homework club component.

In other business

Wehde reported that the roof replacement project at the Nome-

Beltz campus was complete and cost approximately $270,000 less than what was budgeted. Wehde said much of the cost savings came from the building being in better shape than what was anticipated, among other factors. "It's a very good roof, not a single leak," he told the board.

The students of the month were recognized at the Sept. 14 meeting, Janelle Trombridge for the junior high and John Smith at the high school. "The moment she stepped in my classroom, the classroom environment took another two notches up," said junior high English teacher Kris Busk. "Janelle has come back as an eighth grade student and just shined."

High school journalism teacher Susanne Thomas lauded Smith for his determination. "He took it upon himself and showed initiative to be in my journalism class, which is usually reserved for juniors and seniors," she said. "Taking initiative is another aspect of being a role model."

Nome teachers to tour success story

By Tyler Rhodes

A group of Nome Elementary School teachers and district administrators will soon be taking a big field trip to Washington state.

From Oct. 4-6 the group will be visiting Kennewick, Wash., to spend time in the classrooms and amongst the staff in the city's school district. The draw? "Twelve years ago they said 90 percent of our third graders would be at or above reading level," said Nome Public Schools Superintendent Jon Wehde.

Within the last dozen years, the Kennewick schools achieved their goal. Wehde wants a hand-picked group of Nome's teachers to learn firsthand what the Washington district did to make that goal a reality. "Ninety percent achievement of third graders is virtually unheard of; that in itself is reason to go," Wehde said.

Tapped to go on the trip are Meghan Ten Eyck, kindergarten; Sandi Keller, first grade; Mari Lammer, second grade; Liz Korenek-Johnson, third grade; Krista Marvin, fifth/sixth grade; Kris Busk, administrative intern; Janneen Sullivan, administrator; and Jon Berkeley, administrator. Berkely said the teachers going on the trip will in turn be expected to share what they learned with their colleagues after coming home. "It's not just about this trip. It's about bringing it back to Nome Public Schools and taking it forward," Berkeley said.

Wehde, school board member Kirsten Timbers and district personnel officer Bill Gartung had the opportunity to visit the Kennewick district while traveling to a job fair in Seattle last year to recruit teachers to Nome. Wehde said Kennewick's success story is well known to administrators throughout the nation.

After his visit, Wehde said he kept in contact with the district, eventually brokering the deal to let the group of Nome educators come and embed in a number of classrooms. Wehde said the benefits he expects to gain from sending the teachers and administrators to Washington are something that can't be gained from an in-service. Wehde pointed out that Nome's location in relative isolation makes it difficult for staff to easily visit other schools to see how different districts may operate. "The only way to broaden perspective is to take them to a different setting," Berkeley said.

While Nome's teachers will be working with their counterparts in Kennewick, Berkeley said he will be shadowing elementary principals. "I'm keying in on the principals. Where are they day to day? Are they behind their desks? Are they in the classroom?" Berkeley said.

Berkeley said the Kennewick district has similarities in Nome in that it serves a significant number of students from lower-income families and that one cultural group that has lagged farther behind others on standardized test scores—in Nome, it is Alaska Native students; in Kennewick it is the Hispanic population. "There are a list of parallels," Berkeley said.

Wehde said he does not expect an overnight change to occur in Nome's schools following the trip, noting Kennewick took 11 years to reach its goal, experiencing gains and dips along the way. He said the trip is just part of a larger picture to improve the school district. "We found an opportunity that hit the strategic plan perfectly," Wehde said, referring to the guidance plan the district developed last year.

Parents encouraged to participate in the learning process

By Steve Gast, principal Nome – Beltz High School

A couple weeks ago one of my teachers let me borrow his ATV. It was one of the first times I have had the opportunity to travel off road around the area. Once again I continue to learn things. Lesson one: don't try and cross at the mouth of a river, especially at high tide. Lesson two: always fill up with gas before you head out of town. Lesson three: when backing up a six wheeler try not to hit the car parked behind you. I'm still apologizing to Mr. Busk for that one. Lesson four: The water in the Bering Sea is really cold when you're a boy from Texas. Yes, these things actually happened. Those types of silly mistakes got me thinking about the expectations we place on our kids and how we react when they make mistakes.

I know we need to place boundaries and rules in front of our kids as it is a way of life. We also do it for their safety. It is, however, critical that we model the behaviors we expect from them. "Do as I say, not as I do" just doesn't cut it. They deserve more and should expect more from us as parents, teachers and community members. As our kids make mistakes, we need to try and find the lesson to be learned and not simply focus on the punishment to handed down. The real learning comes from the observations our kids make as we deal with the consequences of our mistakes and how we as adults behave in the aftermath.

The philosophy of discipline in a school is always a hot community topic. In the same café you can hear comments about the school being too tough, or too easy, or not very compassionate, and on and on. Such is the dilemma of a school staff. It is our responsibility to develop just the right blend of sternness and compassion. It is our responsibility to make sure we are fair in dispensing consequences while at the same time respecting the individual nature and circumstances of each student. It is not a task taken lightly by our school staff.

We are very cognizant of the fact that when we are discussing student issues, it is a very emotional topic for parents. It is only natural for parents to defend their children. We have been protecting them much of their life. It's what a parent is supposed to do. I know I have been emotional when dealing with issues regarding my own children over the years. So how do we balance that natural urge to protect our kids and at the same time have them learn right from wrong and that every choice carries a set of consequences? Not to make it sound too simple, we do it together, the school and the parents working together to teach our kids to make good choices.

I must digress for just a second. I had the opportunity to be the principal for a day last week at the elementary school as Dr. Keller was upset over the behavior of a first grader in her class. I can almost remember her exact words to me. It went something like this: "I am fed up with this kid. He doesn't listen, he is always messing around with other students, he talks constantly, he threw his book across the room, I've had it with him, I want something position to evaluate not only how I felt as a parent but also the role I play in helping students make correct choices and understanding why some actions have consequences. As parents we all hope that when our kids make mistakes or make bad choices, they learn from them but are not hurt by them.

In every situation we must look for the opportunity to teach our kids why they find themselves in a disciplinary situation and how they might avoid it in the future. It is our responsibility as parents and teachers. It is not fun or easy, but it is essential.

I ask you as parents to place your trust in us to handle situations with your children in a respectful, fair, and confidential manner. I ask you to come to us with an open mind to discuss what has occurred and ways we can work as a team to improve the educational environment for all our kids. Our philosophy at Nome-Beltz is not how severely we can punish, but how we can change behaviors so that students learn from mistakes and do not repeat inappropriate behavior or actions. School discipline is a community effort. It starts at home and is reinforced at school. Let's continue to work together.

I have been both a caring and defensive parent many times. I just so happen to also be the principal. I do understand how you as parents feel when your kids are in trouble at school. I could probably write the book on it. (Refer to my above referenced first grade experience with my son.) I simply ask you to let your guard down, roll up your sleeves and work with us to solve the issues in front of us. And yes, there will be consequences at school for misbehavior, but the goal will never be to just punish, it will be to teach and change behavior. I encourage you to be active, positive participants in the process.

Quick-draw delivers the world to Nome students

By Tyler Rhodes

With a quick wit, eye and hand, Neal Nichols Jr. can make a map pour out of his hand and onto the medium of his choice, be it a sheet of butcher paper or a restaurant napkin.

Perhaps even more impressive than his ability to quickly—and accurately—sketch all 50 states from memory, is how he can keep a room full of elementary school students tuned in and learning as he does it.

the names and dates he just rattled off, Nichols calls for "contestants" to come forward and try and answer questions. Winners received a prize from his box.

During this trip, Nichols worked on a map of Alaska with the younger grades while the fifth and sixth graders were quizzed on a map of the Lower 48 states.

On this latest trip through northwest Alaska, Nichols spent a salesman. He said all of his professional pursuits have been pursued in the interest of keeping up his true passion of being a world traveler. "I have hosted well over 1,000 shows worldwide and landed in Nome from Gambell on my 1,327th takeoff and landing," he said.

More on Nichols and his show can be found at: www.geographygameshow.com

Calling his presentation the Geography Gameshow, Nichols starts with a blank sheet of paper and ends with a map of a state, country, continent or globe and a room full of kids who can shout out important dates and place-names.

Nichols brought his show back to Nome Sept. 15 after completing a tour of Bering Strait School District schools. Armed with a set of markers and a box full of small items he has picked up from his travels across the globe, Nichols puts on three fast-paced shows, giving students a brief sketch of dates and locations, along with clues on how to remember them. After he draws his map and plants the hints on how to remember week teaching art in Stebbins before running through the game show in Unalakleet, Shaktoolik, Koyuk, White Mountain, Golovin, Elim, St. Michael, Teller, Brevig Mission, Wales, Shishmaref, Savoonga and Gambell. Nichols said the Bering Strait district graciously allowed him to do the Nome show.

Nichols has made several trips to Alaska and Nome, first visiting the region in 2005. He has covered the globe for both work and pleasure. He has worked as a fisherman in the Bering Sea in the 1990s. In addition to the fishing gig, he has also worked as a teacher, truck driver, illustrator, carpenter, international courier and to land in Nome. Lewis said it was his understanding that the weather was bad enough that pilots were not able to land under visual flight rules (VFR). According to Lewis, Olson had requested and was granted a special VFR approach to land; "which is perfectly acceptable," Lewis said.

Lewis said he was told the crash occurred sometime around 10:45 a.m.

As of press time, the wreckage of the Cessna still sat near the top of King Mountain, visible from Dexter. The tundra along a relatively flat bench near the top of the mountain shows where the aircraft impacted the ground and slid through a patch of small boulders. The impact marks continue through the rocks where it appears the right wing would have struck a larger rock standing approximately three feet high. It appears the plane spun 180 degrees after that point, sliding a few more yards and coming to rest facing the direction from which it impacted the mountain.

While the cabin of the plane is largely intact, several pieces of the aircraft were strewn about the crash site. The prop and engine from the right wing were scattered several yards downhill from the wreckage. While the propeller stopped short of where the plane ultimately came to rest, the engine continued on 10 to 20 yards past the aircraft's body.

The plane's nose was badly crumpled. The right side door of the plane remained open beneath which an empty packet of beef jerky and water bottle sat on the tundra. A fire extinguisher sat on the ground near the plane's tail, although there was no sign of fire around the aircraft.

Olson apparently walked away from the wreckage. Alaska State Troopers and Nome Search and Rescue officials say they were not called to respond to the incident.

Olson, from Golovin, represents Senate District T in the state Legislature.

You don't have to be nuts to do a triathlon

By Bob Lawrence, MD
Alaska Family Doctor

Sports medicine is about keeping people in the game of life by treating acute problems and preventing future injury. For this reason, sports medicine doctors often participate in various sports themselves in order to understand the mechanism of injuries in different activities. With that in mind, I tried something new last weekend: a triathlon sponsored by the Nome-Beltz Swim Team.

A triathlon is an endurance race involving three segments: a swim; a run; and a bike ride. Some triathlons are short distance races called sprints. Others are long all-day events like the Iron-Man Triathlon. Nome's race was designed to be somewhere in between.

The swimming portion involved 20 laps. Just before the race, my brother, who is a real Iron-Man triathlete, informed me that this was considered an Olympic distance. Not a challenge for the faint of heart. I had not done much swimming since elementary school, so I had spent several mornings at the pool working to build up my endurance. On the first day back in the pool, I was reminded that the human body is not designed for the water. You can keep your head above water and breathe, or you can make forward progress. To do both requires training (I might also recommend supplemental oxygen). My goal was to look like Michael Phelps. In the end, I finished the pool segment of the triathlon feeling more like a hunting dog trying to make it back to shore.

The second segment involved a six-mile run. They say every endurance athlete eventually hits "the wall." In Nome, the wall is called Anvil Mountain. Each runner had to complete not just one loop halfway up the mountain, but two laps. I am very comfortable with distance running and even trail running up steep hills. What surprised me is just how much energy is already spent in a triathlon before even putting on the running shoes. Whatever energy remained was quickly absorbed by the mountain.

The final segment of the race was a relatively short six-mile bike ride from the high school to town looping back on the Teller highway. The biking distance of most triathlons of this caliber would be 12-24 miles. I suppose Nome's race is shorter to accommodate for the fact that participants are racing clunky mountain bikes over partial gravel roads up grades that would make most vehicle clutches smell a little smoky.

Here is where I learned the meaning of an athlete's "second wind." In the athletic world, the second wind refers to a sudden release of energy from intracellular power plants called mitochondria that suddenly find an efficient balance of oxygen and glucose about the time an athlete is ready to give up and go home. In Nome, the second wind refers to a 30 mile-an-hour headwind that hits just about the time the course turns uphill. I looked up that long hill toward Icy View and saw the wind sock at City Field pointing straight out behind me. Perhaps my brain was deprived of oxygen, but at this point I was convinced that the other participants had battery-powered engines on their bikes that allowed them to climb the hill into the wind with apparent ease.

They say the race does not always go to the swift, but to the one who keeps on running. I say the race goes to the swift guy who keeps on running. In this sense, our own Dr. Phil Hofstetter is an impressive athlete. Once he left the pool, I never saw him again until I arrived at the finish line to find him waiting comfortably for the rest of the pack.

My goal was merely to finish this race, which I did, thank you, to the applause of family who served as a "pit-crew" of sorts and patiently waited for almost two hours for me to finish. And I became a better doctor learning the etiology of a few new sport-specific injuries. My iliotibial band and I had a little conversation after the race, and my right shoulder required some attention. I was also reminded that to avoid cramps, endurance activities require a balance of nutrition and hydration. Gatorade, which normally tastes like flavored seawater to me, became very refreshing.

I really enjoy sports medicine. I believe we are all athletes for life with bodies that are meant to be active. This is not meant to imply that our chosen sports must take place on a trail or in a swimming pool. I would not for a minute say that a triathlon is for everyone. But I do recognize that we are meant to remain active. And many activities like commercial fishing, Eskimo-dancing, mining, hunting, and dog mushing often require the same endurance as a triathlon.

The point is that no one is meant to sit on the bench of life. A big part of overall health is keeping the body in shape for whatever activity presents itself. This includes making physical activity a part of daily life and making good nutrition a part of every meal.

It is also helpful to have regular community activities sponsored by regional organizations throughout the year to encourage people to stay active. You may consider training for a future community race, run, or walk. I think you will find the preparation motivating and, regardless of your place at the finish line, you will find the results rewarding.

at Nome Elementary School, fifth and sixth grade students received nearly all their instruction in all subjects from the same teacher. The classrooms were their own little enclosed educational worlds. This year that world got a lot bigger.

Dubbed the 56ers, the fifth and sixth grade classes at Nome Elementary this year are in the hands of a team of four teachers who are leading a program that is a hybrid of the junior high and elementary school models. Throughout the day, the students move from one teacher to another for different subjects. Some classes are a mix of fifth and sixth graders. Fridays are dubbed Expedition Fridays, where students have two sessions in the day that often involve working on in-depth projects or trips that get them out of the classroom.

The collaborative venture, taught by Thrun, McRae, Keith Conger and Krista Marvin, had simmered as an idea for a few years. The idea started to take a more definitive shape when last year’s elementary school principal, Shari Biscotti, approached Thrun about making a change.

Some of the impetus for the change can also be credited to the Anvil City Science Academy charter school, which serves a capped number of fifth through eighth graders in the district. Employing an approach that emphasizes projects that cut across the curriculum and grade levels, the charter school has performed at the highest at the top. “Usually the dreams and visions from before have been thrown out the window,” Conger said.

Those dreams and visions have hit the ground running this year and have required adjustments from the collaborative teachers, the school staff and the students. The 56er teachers said the changes have played out well so far.

For the students, being a 56ers means having more responsibility. Calling it “self-governance,” the teachers said students are capable of making good decisions for themselves. “The students are responsible for making good choices throughout the day,” Conger said.

That philosophy has resulted in changes such as the students walking themselves from their pod to activities such as music or gym. “It’s an elementary fact of life that teachers walk students down the halls in lines,” Conger said. “We’re building a transition that says, ‘We think you can do it,’” he said.

Other changes allow the students to eat their lunch in their classroom or in the shared area in the pod. At the Sept. 14 school board meeting, Nome Elementary School principal Dave Keller remarked on the atmosphere gained from eating lunch together in the pod. “Being in their pod during lunch, it’s almost like being in a restaurant setting,” he told the board. “The pod just feels more comfortable. It feels like these kids have formed a relationship. It’s a team. It’s a team among students; it’s a team among teachers.”

of us have our pet projects that we’ve had to give up,” Marvin said.

But Marvin and her colleagues said the benefits of collaboration have outweighed any downsides. “I’ve gained three experts to bounce ideas off,” Thrun said. The 56ers’ days are structured so that the four teachers have time to meet in the morning to plan and collaborate while students are in classes that take them out of the pod, such as music or gym.

When the students are in the pod, Conger and McRae handle the math courses while Thrun teaches writing and science. Marvin also teaches writing and social studies. Throughout the schedule, each teacher sees each of the approximately 110 fifth and sixth grade students in the school. Thrun, who was teaching kindergarten immediately prior to this year, said she likes having contact with all the students in the grade levels. “When I see this class graduate, I get to say, ‘That was my class,’” she said.

The new system also has the students interacting and learning more with a wider set of peers. Fifth and sixth graders may be sitting side by side during a math lesson. Those who are more proficient in reading are grouped together while those who need more attention are taught together. Similar groupings are used for the different math classes. Students are able to test into the more advanced classes. “It makes it wrong if we don’t provide the opportunity to move up to other groups,” Conger said.

Marvin and her fellow teachers said they have not sensed any signs of students feeling stigmatized by the separation. Marvin said she related the different paces and styles of learning to how and when each student learned to walk, noting that they all did not acquire that skill at the same age.

In addition to the core areas of study, the teachers are working to infuse cultural- and community-based learning into their lessons. McRae is working with students to develop plays based on Alaska Native stories. Conger had his students build scale models of King Island. Thrun said she is considering having her students bring baked goods to the elders and seniors at the XYZ Center. Marvin has worked to bring artists, both visiting and from the community into the classroom.

A result of these more experienced-based learning projects, the teachers said, is that some students who may not excel in a traditional math or reading class all of the sudden become leaders when engaged in the project. “It matches more learning modalities,” Conger said of the new approach.

levels in regard to state testing standards. In contrast, Nome Elementary has struggled with meeting the state’s goals on the standardized tests.

Thrun said she brought up the idea of incorporating some of what is offered at the charter school several years ago when Carl White was principal at Nome Elementary. Envisioned during White’s tenure and planned during Biscotti’s, the 56er concept survived through an administration change at the elementary as Dave Keller came on as principal this year. The teachers said they have appreciated the support from the school and district’s administration, especially as the elementary experienced turnover

The students also have the option of staying indoors during the recess period to read, catch up on homework or practice their band instrument if they choose. The changes appear to have cut down on behavioral problems and allowed more time for interaction between the teachers and students, helping build a rapport. “The vast majority are taking to it,” Thrun said of the new environment.

The new system has also required adaptation from the four teachers. In some ways it has allowed the individual teachers to play to their strengths, teaching the areas in which they are the most versed. It has also meant giving up some of the autonomy. “It is a sacrifice, a lot

Volleyball: Nome bests Bethel, edged out by Kotz

Story and photos by Tyler Rhodes

Simply saying Kotzebue won doesn't quite tell the tale of the long battle played out on the floor of the Nome-Beltz gym Friday night. The Lady Nanooks volleyball team made the Huskies earn every bit of the victory in a four-game marathon that saw the tide turn for both teams several times. Unfortunately for the Nanooks, close doesn't count, giving the match to Kotzebue which won three games to one. Kotzebue grabbed the first two games, 25-23 and 25-22. Nome battled back to take the third game 25-23 as both teams tightened up their games, yielding long volleys back and forth. It seemed Nome would keep the tide in its favor right up to the end of the fourth game when Kotzebue was able to gain the upper hand at the last minute and grab the game and match with another 25-23 win. This was the second meeting of the Nanooks and Huskies with the same, close results. Nome was able to dispatch Bethel Saturday afternoon with three decisive victories. Nome won 25-14, 25-10 and 25-11. The junior varsity ranks mirrored those of their more experienced teammates. Kotzebue's JV squad bested Nome by winning two out of three games. Each team took at 25-14 victory with Kotzebue winning the tiebreaker 15-10. Nome's JV squad was able to beat Bethel twice over the weekend. In the first match-up, the Nanooks won two games in a best-of-three series (25-16, 25-18). In Saturday's games, the Nome JV team took three in a row to win a full match (25-14, 25-10, 25-11). The Nanooks will next play in Home at the Peninsula Challenge Tournament Oct. 1-2.

Cross country: Schmidt tops the field in Bethel

Rosa Schmidt kept up her perfect record this season by winning the Bethel Invitational cross country race Sept. 28 by more than a minute. ## Obituaries

Holden Akiinginaaq Apatiki

Akiinginaaq was born on Sep. 9, 1929 to Homer and Thelma Apatiki. He married Elfie Kulowiya on Oct. 16, 1949 and together they raised 11 children: Michael, Charlene, Ennis (raised by Homer and Thelma), Evans, Alvina, Kay, Laura, Holden Jr, Jerome, Shem Rose and Iknaay. Elfie died on May 15, 1987. He had 95 grandchildren and great-grandchildren and two more on the way.

Holden's best memories are from growing up on the southside (Uughqani) fishing, hunting and camping. The memories on the southside of the island are treasured as we respected the land and the river down there.

Holden was part of a rescue crew when a US Navy plane crashed in the summer of 1955. He and his cousins Bruce Boolowon and Clifford Iknokinok, Sr. went back to Gambell from the crash site on a skin boat to get medicine for the injured Navy crew.

Holden, Elfie and their children and grandchildren camped at Tapghuq, his maternal grandparent Aatghilnguq's home. He and Elfie picked salmon berries, sometimes filling their 20 gallon wooden barrel at what they called Elfie's garden "Aghquvluk." Holden also caught a polar bear right off the beach on the ice in 1987. How proud his wife, Elfie, children and extended family were!

Holden was raised in a Christian home and served faithfully as a trustee for the Gambell Presbyterian Church for many years. He also served on the Gambell City Council for 25 years. He was also honorably discharged from the Alaska Army National Guard after six years of service to his country.

Holden is survived by all his children, siblings Ralph Sr, Jerome and Edna, 95 grandchildren and great grandchildren; Noongwooks of Savoonga, Tungiyans, Imergans of Gambell and many more ramka in the Pugughilghmii clan. He's preceded in death by his parents Homer and Thelma, his wife, Elfie, his grandson Eric, his sister Inez Campbell, brother Hugo Tun'ghi Apatiki, his grandparents Suluk and Qisgenga and Aatghilnguq and Utuqa.

Walter Willie Acoman "Arnanguq"

Walter was born to William and Mary Acoman on June 3, 1939 at St. Michael. He died at the age of 71 on August 22, 2010. Walter wed Margaret Nils on January 5, 1964 and together they had five children who include Arlene Kobuk, Diane Thompson, Terry Acoman (deceased), Veronica and Jessica Acoman. He also had a son named Jerry Otten Kahutak.

Walter attended elementary until the seventh grade. He attended vocational school in Dallas, Texas and completed a welding course within six months. Thereafter, he resided in Dallas for 2 ½ years and was employed as a welder.

Upon returning to Alaska, Walter was employed by Yutana Barge Lines as a welder for 17 years. His most recent employment was as a Custodian for Bering Strait School District for 20 years, which he retired from in 1992. He was also a commercial herring fisherman starting in 1985.

Walter also lived a subsistence lifestyle, which consisted of hunting, fishing and gathering berries. He generously shared his catch with members of the community. He also loved to gather wood for the winter.

Walter's hobbies included fiddling (which he loved playing with his band mates), reading on a daily basis, listening to country and fiddling music, watching wrestling on satellite, spending time with his grandchildren, taking walks and riding his Honda.

Walter took pride in sharing his knowledge and wisdom with the younger generation.

Water was preceded in death by his parents William and Mary Acoman; siblings Clyde Acoman, Pauline Nunooruk, Henry Kobuk, Ignatius Acoman, and Kenneth Acoman, Sr.; half brothers Norbert Otten, Sr., Roger Otten, Sr.,

Raymond and Vincent Otten; his son Terry Acoman; also his cousin/friend/fellow band member Leonard Kobuk, Sr.

Walter is survived by his wife of 48 years, Margaret; children Jerry Kahutak of Anchorage; Georgiana Berger of Anchorage; daughters and sons-in-law Arlene and George Kobuk, Diane and Mark Thomason, Veronica Acoman, all of St. Michael, and Jessica Acoman of Kotlik; 12 grandchildren and two great-grandchildren, Paul John Thompson and Terry Calvin Acoman; stepfather-in-law James Lockwood of St. Michael; half brother and sister-in-law Carl and Elvira Otten of Peach Springs, Arizona, and many cousins, nieces, nephews, friends and also in-laws.

Rest in peace, husband, father, grandfather, great grandfather, brother and uncle! We love you!

There will be a 40-day dinner at Margaret's on October 1st at 6 p.m. Everyone is welcome.

Trooper Beat

On September 9, Alaska State Troopers received a call from a TUMET construction company supervisor reporting one of the workers on the Gambell jobsite was shot at. Investigation determined that Ernest Booshu, 18, of Gambell, engaged in a verbal argument with a TUMET worker and retrieved a shotgun from his residence. Booshu returned to where the worker was at and discharged the gun in close proximity to the worker. The shot was also in the direction of several residential homes. Ernest Booshu fled the village and AST responded to the village and after several hours of telephonic negotiation with Booshu he turned himself in to AST at the Gambell public safety building without incident where he was arrested and then transported to Nome.

On September 11, at approximately 2:04 a.m., Village Public Safety Officer Gerald Otto in Elim reported to AST that his family was assaulted by two disguised men inside their home in Elim. VPSO Otto stated that at approximately 1:20 a.m., he had received a frantic phone call from a female caller reporting that there is someone committing suicide at the bluff outside of Elim. VPSO Otto responded to the area and found no one near the bluff. Shortly after VPSO Otto left his residence in response to the call for help two men forced entry into his residence where his wife and children were waiting for his return. The two men armed with axe handles threatened Mrs. Otto who ran to her room and retrieved a firearm. The two intruders fled the house. Troopers from Nome and Unalakleet responded to conduct the investigation. It was determined with the cooperation and assistance of many people in Elim that Patrick Takak, 19, of Elim, and Dylan Nayokpuk 18, of Elim, and a female juvenile from Elim were responsible for planning out and accomplishing the assault. On September 16, Takak and Nayokpuk were arrested on warrants issued from the Nome court. Both were transported to Nome without incident.

On September 11, at approximately 4:00 a.m., Savoonga VPSO Jack Linn received a report of a disturbance. Lynne Noongwook, 37, of Savoonga, was contacted by the VPSO and subsequently arrested for Assault III.

On September 12, at approximately 3:00 a.m., VPSO Dan Harrelson responded to a disturbance at a residence in White Mountain. Tyrone Buffas, 28, of White Mountain, was contacted by the VPSO and subsequently arrested for violating his probation.

On September 13, Unalakleet AST received a report of an assault in Stebbins. Stebbins VPOs were instructed to arrest Bibiana Snowball, 19, of Stebbins for assaulting two female teenagers. Snowball was intoxicated at the time of the assault. The teenagers did not require medical attention. On September 14, Snowball was telephonically arraigned and was released on her own recognizance.
