DNR to hold off-shore lease sale

By Diana Haecker

In a standing-room-only meeting held at the Visitor Center last Friday, Department of Natural Resources mineral property manager Kerwin Krause updated a crowd of more than 30 miners on an upcoming off-shore lease sale. Krause announced that the sale is going to be held on September 28 at Old St. Joe's Hall. There will be an outcry auction for tracts near shore divided in 54 tracts, each ranging from less than 40 to 160 acres in size. A sealed bid auction will be held for 35 tracts in waters from 30-foot to 60-foot depth, ranging in size from 200 to a couple of 3,000 acre tracts.

Krause also informed the miners that there would be environmental monitoring requirements. The state, he said, has no benthic concerns in waters 20 feet and shallower. There will be some environmental monitoring in the transition zone between 20- and 30-foot water depth. In waters 30 feet deep and deeper, Krause said, there definitely will be environmental monitoring requirements. He mentioned that WestGold operated offshore dredges in Norton Sound and that they were required to perform baseline studies. The studies cost WestGold about $2.5 million and still contain very useful information for miners today. Krause said the department might go along with the idea of having a mitigation bank that would collect mitigation money from miners operating in 30 feet and deeper. Krause said an amount of $2,000 per disturbed acre is still an accurate number for monitoring requirements. "If you decide to mine and disturb an acre, yes, you may have to pay that amount," Krause said. A miner from Alabama said that in his state, the "mitigation fund" is considered to be another form of a bribe to be left alone, but Krause assured him that the money would be used to fund monitoring and biological work.

Krause also said that a South African mining company named Aurumar, an affiliate of mining corporations Debeers and AngloGold Ashanti, has shown interest to mine in the deeper waters of Norton

USPS contemplates closure of 36 post offices in Alaska

By Diana Haecker

The United States Post Office released a list last week with 3,653 post offices nationwide that will be studied for closure or relocation. Thirty-six post offices in Alaska are on that list, including the post offices in Wales and White Mountain.

Ernie Swanson, communications programs specialist with the USPS explained that the postal mail service has been losing mail volume for years and is losing money to the tune of $23 million per day. The computer-generated list titled "Expanded Access Study list" was drawn up at the USPS headquarters in Washington, D.C. using criteria that looked at short business hours, small mail volume and little foot traffic.

Swanson said that the Anchorage District office is going to evaluate if it is feasible to close these offices. "Now it is up to post office management in Alaska to see if in fact it is a good idea to close these offices," Swanson said. He also said that there would be questionnaires

Nome Gold to start gold production soon

Placer mining operations set to begin near old Camp #5

By Diana Haecker

The corporation that bought 11,500 acres of Alaska Gold Company's lands around Nome is in the first stages of starting placer mining operations at Monroeville, says Robert Salna, the primary investor of Nome Gold Alaska Corporation.

Salna said that management is in place with Jeff Keener of Fairbanks as the manager of exploration, Keith Tryck as financial manager located in Anchorage and operations manager Barry Clay in Nome. Nome Gold bought mining equipment from Quality Rubber, a recreational mining outfit that mined at Quarz Creek. "We needed excavators, bulldozers and now we're trying to buy trucks," said Salna. Two big wash plants have been also added to their inventory list, and Salna said the company can start minor operations in the next couple of weeks.

Salna said that the construction of the new Norton Sound Health Corporation hospital has tied up a lot of skilled labor work force and heavy equipment. "We're still trying to hire equipment operators," Salna said. "There are some qualified people here, but they are working on the hospital." He added that it is also hard to find accommodations since the hospital is taking up most of Nome's rental apartments and houses. "We won't be operating in full force until next year," he said.

Salna said that they are looking to hire a dozen people and will eventually need 30 workers to operate the placer mine. He said their mine would be on a footprint of 10 acres, with five acres mined and the other five used to pile up the peeled tundra and overburden. Eventually, he said, the company would like to purchase a Rainier Skyline excavator, a system capable of moving 1,500 tons of earth per hour, according to the excavator's website.

Salna explained that high grade gold had been mined out and that this requires a lot of earth being moved to get to the remainder of the gold and to take advantage of the high gold prices.

Salna is the main investor in the newly formed Nome Gold Alaska company. He is also president and CEO of the Canadian company Dover Investments with a few hold-

Dear Editor,

I read your article about Larry's Auto's trouble with the City of Nome over disputed parking. In that article I understand the City is willing to go to a jury trial over a $5,000 bill. A jury lawyer costs at least $200 per hour, and a jury trial will take many, many hours. So the City will have to pay a lawyer well over the contested $5,000 bill.

The City is low on money and so is raising property taxes. I am willing to pay the increased taxes for the library, schools and Rec Center, but I do not want to pay attorney fees for a seemingly ridiculous lawsuit.

I have parked many times in the area the City is arguing about. There is no sign saying not to park there or common sense reason not to park there. It seems to me the City will lose their case against Larry's even as they loose thousands of taxpayer dollars.

Sincerely,
Karen Olanna

Dear Sirs,

I was born in Nome on June 17, 1933 to Emil Jorgensen and Nora Nahata. We lived in a very small cabin that was next to a large storage building where Santa's sleigh was stored and real close to the railroad that was from the Power Plant to the dock. We Native kids played on that rail. Of course, we got off when the train would come. Some day I hope to spend several days in Nome and reminisce about those days.

Sincerely,
Al Jorgensen

Letter to the Editor:

Recently we phoned an order for a hot water heater to a Home Depot store in Anchorage to be delivered to Nome by air. Upon arrival, the ticket had a charge for Nome city sales tax of 5 percent. We were told the sales tax was automatic since Nome has a sales tax. We called Nome city hall to inquire if the "out of city point of sale" sales tax was a new policy and were assured it was not. If not, who is receiving the tax money being collected? Has anyone else had this experience? We will be pursuing this further, along with city hall.

Where is it going?

Editor's Note: Apparently it does not go to the city. Interesting.

Editorial

Get involved, run

Now is the time for folks who are sick and tired of having no choice to take action. Are we going to do something about situations where incumbents run unopposed, where only one candidate had filed, where no one is brave enough to run against an entrenched politician?

We need to have fresh new ideas, new approaches, new voices and folks who are not afraid to bring about change and take on the established way of doing business in Nome. We need folks who understand the need for transparency in government. We need folks who want to make Nome the best town in Alaska. We need folks who have visions for the future. We need folks who are not sharpening and grinding axes. We need folks who can relate to the people of Nome— all the people. We need folks who are committed to education, energy conservation, social issues and economic progress.

We have good people in Nome. They need to be encouraged to run for office and supported in their efforts. We can't be ho-hum about local politics. We are the grass roots of the nation, so let's take care of the lawn. Get involved with government and run for office.

FIVE DOLLARS AND HOLDING—Monday afternoon the Bonanza Express gasoline price remained the same — $4.99 per gallon and the same for diesel fuel at the pump.

UP, UP AND AWAY – Fuel at the Crowley pumps has gone up half a dollar, for now less than the $2 jump in gas price rumored to arrive at all pumps in Nome when the first barges come over the horizon.

Fuel up; waiting for the other shoe to drop

By Sandra L. Medearis

The low grumble shaking the ground on dread fuel prices to come should fade but not entirely as some information became available last week.

The fuel surcharge on electric costs is poised to go up, and gas prices are heading that direction.

Fuel to keep the lights on and televised sports playing in Nome's living rooms came off the barge and across the dock more expensive than last year's cost.

Last year's fuel supply for utility generators cost $2,562, compared to the recent delivery at $3,4132 per gallon, according to Nome Joint Utility System's manager, John K. Handeland.

"Based on the computations we have in place and the price we end up with, it does call for an increase in the surcharge, but to the extent we can maintain it close to the present level is our goal," Handeland said. "The board of directors and the staff of NJUS do have to live here too."

Any setting of the fuel surcharge that applies to each kwh consumed will not happen until NJUS staff takes inventory on fuel left from last season. The fuel cost that is operational in computing the rise in cost each season at NJUS results from a rolling average of new fuel combined with the cost of fuel left in the storage tanks; last year's 2010 price resulted from averaging in 2009 fuel remaining in the tanks. Likewise, the surcharge will be computed on the cost of the recent 1.6-gallon delivery with the approximate 1 million gallons already on hand.

"We expect that the actual net cost increase would turn out to be less than 85 cents per gallon," Handeland said.

Crowley's freshly-stenciled gas sign at the pumps by AC Store showed $5.44 cents a gallon last week, up by about 49 cents, but customers who fueled up over the weekend enjoyed the old price as the pumps registered the old price of $4.95 on credit card receipts until mid-day Monday. The smallest fuel delivery by Crowley to a home, 0 to 99 gallons, has gone to $5.8359 per gallon, compared with the previous price of $5.2406 including sales tax. Crowley staff confirmed the new prices Friday.

The Bonanza Express at Seppala Drive and Bering Street showed the same $4.99 per gallon for gasoline Monday. For fuel oil, Bonanza staff quoted $4.60 per gallon. Staff did not have information on how long prices would hold at either vendor.

Handeland noted that oil prices are still volatile. A price check on May 25 and June 25 showed a 50-cent difference on those two days; the July 25 price showed a 20-cent difference, he said.

In other words, the price of fuel in Western Alaska is a developing story.

Kelso goes for fluoride tooth and nail

By Sandra L. Medearis

The Nome Common Council met July 27 to pass several ordinances into second reading and final passage at its next regular meeting Aug. 8. At the close of the July meeting, a work session with the Carrie M McLain Museum commission ensued.

During a public comment period a soon-to-be and always-has-been hot button topic emerged.

Local dentist Mark Kelso noted, in his estimation, the serious situation where the utility fluoridation mechanism had not been working for a month. Kelso cited the support of a buddy,

Troy Ritter, an environmental health consultant at Alaska Native Tribal Health Consortium in backing continued fluoridation of Nome's water supply. The Nome Joint Utility Board has directed its manager, John K. Handeland to draw up a resolution calling for a halt to fluoridation to be presented to the Council for approval. Utility board members Fred Moody and Carl Emmons have been vocal in calling for an end to fluoridation.

Ask Moody about fluoride: "I don't even know why they have to think about it. It is poison," Moody will say. Emmons feels that kids

Port Commission wants boats out of the harbor by winter

By Diana Haecker

Port commissioners Jeff Darling, Jim West Jr., Charlie Lean, Jimmy Adams and Cam Kristenson spent the better part of the port meeting last week discussing a potential new rule that would require every vessel out of the harbor waters before winter. Boats that over-wintered in the port, like the Point Barrow have created problems with torn up fenders that need costly replacement.

Also, boats that are left in the harbor overwinter suffer greatly from abrasive ice movement and create environmental hazards. "We should make abundantly clear that vessels that stay in the water do not fare well in the winter," Cam Kristenson said. This is the case with a sunken vessel owned by Mike Benchoff. The 99 cent Romance has periodically leaked oil into the harbor since January and harbormaster Joy Baker said that there seems to be no resolution of either getting fines paid or the vessel removed.

Baker said in a letter to Benchoff that the situation must come to an end and gave him until July 1 to haul out the 99 cent Romance, clean up the sheet pile wall and the spill booms loaned to Benchoff by the city. According to city manager and harbormaster, Benchoff still owes the port more than $7,700 for past due balance and cleanup costs and fines. As of the port meeting, the vessel and a tugboat were still in their place on the short wall of the harbor.

In other business Baker reported that a consultant visited Nome last week to take a look at the fenders. Sandra Morris with PND engineering submitted cost estimates to the tune of $1.3 million for fender replacement on the east wall and $1.7 million for fender replacement on the south wall. City Manager Josie Bahnke said that the Department of Transportation and Public Facilities has a harbor grant program that the city could apply for, but the program requires a 50 percent match of other funding. The Commissioners decided to apply for the DOT harbor fender grant and passed a motion to that effect. Mulling how to come up with the 50 percent match, Bahnke informed the commissioners that there are $2.45 million in an unrestricted account for the port and $4.4 million in two restricted accounts that are used to pay back the NOAA loan and for causeway maintenance.

Josie Bahnke said in her report that Nome saw in the last few weeks visitors associated with the Arctic Imperative workshop and the Northern Waters Task Force that were specifically interested in the port. These are indicators of busier times ahead, Bahnke said.

She informed the commission that the city council contemplates to expand the number of commissioners on the port commission. She wanted the blessing of the port commission before it went into first reading before the city council the next day. The five port commissioners are appointed by the mayor and confirmed by the city council.

The commissioners had no objection to that.

Commission chair Jim West Jr. said he sees more commissioners as an opportunity for more input and more variety in opinion. West Jr. made the motion to increase the number of port commissioners from five to seven. The motion carried. The Nome Common Council took up the issue the following day.

ings in Nome toward Sunset. Salna said an offshore corporation by the name of Indigo Gold Corporation has also invested in the Nome Gold Alaska Corp.

Salna said the Nome Gold, which has inherited more than just alluvial gold properties from Alaska Gold Co./NovaGold Resources, will continue to lease land to dog mushers off Little Creek Road. Nome Gold Alaska Corp. also will allow camping on their property on West Beach, charging $200 per season and a $200 clean up deposit. Salna said there are no plans to get into the gravel business as they have signed a non-competition agreement with NovaGold Resources in regard to gravel sales.

"Our intentions are to maximize the mine life potential of 40 years on the land that we bought," said Salna. "We hope to be operating for the next 40 years and bring some employment to the region."

sent out to the affected communities for public input on the proposal to close the offices and public meetings to be held with presentations on how mail delivery would work.

"This is not a done deal by all means," Swanson said. He said that if a certain post office were to close, the USPS would contract with a commercial establishment in that particular town to provide mailboxes and other mail services. Swanson said shutdowns would not occur until 2012. He also added that Alaska has to be looked at with different criteria in mind, as low foot traffic and small mail volume is to be expected for rural communities.

Swanson said that the post office is required by law to provide postal service but since the Postal Reorganization Act in the mid 1970s, there are no government subsidies to keep the post office afloat. "We had to survive on our own revenue and did so for more than 25 years," Swanson said. Then came the Internet age, high gas prices and lately the economic downturn and the mail business slid into the red numbers.

Proposals to save money included changes to the bypass mail, but the Alaska Congressional delegation met with Postmaster General Patrick Donahoe, and he made the commitment to continue the bypass mail system. Another change proposed was to eliminate mail delivery on Saturdays. "We could save $3.5 billion per year if we didn't have to deliver on Saturdays," Swanson said. Congress so far has not acted on a bill that would do away with Saturday delivery.

Other post offices on the potential closure list are Anvik, Crooked Creek, Ekwo, Kaltag, Kobuk, Koyukuk, Red Devil, Shageluk, Skwentna and Stevens Village.

LOOK AT THAT DISTRICT— During last week’s constituent meeting in Nome, Rep. Neal Foster showed the current redistricting map that extends his district to 68 communities.

Foster, Olson give legislative update

Alcoholism, suicide prevention and high energy costs top list of constituent concerns

By Diana Haecker

A dozen Nomeites showed up for an update with State House Representative Neal Foster and Senator Donnie Olson during the mid-day constituent meet-and-greet held at the Mini Convention Center on July 26. The legislators spoke about the redistricting map, the failed coastal zone management program extension, high energy costs, suicide prevention and state investments like the proposed $4.5 billion Susitna Hydro project and the road to Nome. Note please, Neal Foster said, Governor Sean Parnell wants it to be known that it’s not a road to Nome, but that his interest is in developing roads for resource developers.

The new redistricting map turned House District 39 into the geographically biggest district covering an area from St. Lawrence Island all the way east to the Canadian border and southeast to Tok and McCarthy. The district swells from 28 communities to 68. Foster said that over about 30 years the district has been made up of predominantly Inupiat and Yupik cultures. “Those paired groups are now severed and we have to pair up now with interior Athabascans,” said Foster.

All things considered, Foster said, the good thing is that the house district remains rural as there were maps that considered lumping the Bering Strait region in with Fairbanks suburbs. Olson also mentioned that the failed ballot measure 1 to expand the number of legislators from 40 to 44 might get another push. When discussing the lawsuits that were filed to challenge the redistricting map, Foster and Olson put the situation in perspective saying that while not ideal, other maps could be worse. “There is only one scenario that’s better, but many, many others that are worse,” Foster said. Donny Olson added that it is even more important than ever to get constituents out to vote.

Foster addressed the state’s projection of declining oil revenue and the increase in costs to run the state. The state’s capital budget for FY 2012 totals $3.2 billion. This district was appropriated $72.4 million with Nome getting a bit more than $22 million, which includes $14 million for the construction of a new museum named the Richard Foster Building. The operating budget totals $9 billion for the state, including $273,000 for Nome in revenue shares, $400 million for the Power Cost Equalization endowment and $13 million for the VPSO program and $1.1 billion forward funding education.

Discussions quickly turned to how to solve the dilemma of the state depending on the finite amount of oil to fund its operations. There is the idea of an endowment, Foster said, that would horde money for the future when there is no more oil running through TAPS. But that, he said, would be a self-fulfilling prophecy that would not solve the problem of declining revenue and increasing government cost in the long run. And then there was the Governor’s idea of cutting the oil companies’ taxes. Foster said that the idea behind House bill 108 was to give oil developers an incentive to explore for more oil, but there was no assurance given that oil companies actually would commit to more development. Foster said he voted for the bill to get it out of the House and into the Senate, where it died. Sen. Olson added that when the bill came before the Senate, no oil executives came to Juneau to testify. “That looked sketchy to us,” he said.

Constituents asked Foster why rural Alaska still has to fight tooth and nail to offset the high costs of energy while the railbelt gets a multi-billion dollar hydro power plant and a dam built. Foster said that two thirds of the Alaska population lives on the road system and he explained, “when the tide rises, all ships would go up.” He responded that it is only fair that the population centers see their fair share of funds, but he also hopes that as the railbelt saves energy costs, the state could allocate money to rural areas to offset high energy costs in bush Alaska. He pointed to the fully funded weatherization and energy rebate programs as well as the PCE program.

Jim Stimpfle inquired if there are movements afoot to allow net-metering in Alaska. “You’ll never bring down energy costs with the PCE,” Stimpfle said. Foster said that Rep. Kurt Olson (R-Kenai) introduced House Bill 37 that would allow grid-tied customers who generate electricity from renewable resources to receive credit from their utility for the excess power they generate beyond what they consume.

Another question was about the projected increase in maritime transport in the Bering Strait and yet no money to speak of is allocated for a harbor at Little Diomedea? Neal Foster agreed that the funds thrown at the southeastern marine highway system dwarf the amount of money that Diomedea gets for reliable transportation.

Addressing suicide, Foster spoke about his experience of traveling to Hooper Bay and St. Michael to hear suggestions for suicide prevention. While Foster was in St. Michael, a young man killed himself. Foster said that it was horrible to feel the loss and to see everybody in the village suffer. Foster said he had a conversation with the Governor and told him that suicide prevention can’t be the “soup of the day.”

Foster said he secured funding for a culturally based and holistic suicide prevention called “Qungasvik.” Alcoholism, suicide, sexual abuse and child abuse are all connected, commented Melanie Bahnke, vice-president at Kawerak Inc. She said that although western Alaska has the highest rate of sexual abuse, yet abuse prevention programs are the lowest funded in the state of Alaska. Bahnke added the need for an alcohol treatment center and for VPSO holding cells.

Norton Sound Health Corp. president and CEO Carol Piscocoy said that NSHC is contemplating accommodating a sobering center in the old hospital once the move to the new hospital site is complete.

In closing, Foster recapped that suicide prevention solutions must be tailored to each community. The same holds true for solutions to bring down energy costs, through a combination of weatherization, renewable energy production, PCE and programs like RuRALCAP’s Energy Wise program.

Regarding the Western Access Study — a.k.a. Road to Nome — Governor Parnell so far has approved $1.25 million for studies. So far, a road that would access mining districts, and eventually end up in Nome, would cost $3 to $5 billion. Foster said that in talks with Parnell, it became clear that the governor does not see this as a road to Nome, but a road to resources with special interest to access the Ambler mining district. NovaGold Resources Inc.

owns a copper-zinc-gold-silver property of more than 90,000 acres of patented state of Alaska and BLM mining claims in the Ambler district. NovaGold was the recipient of the first completed road to resources, the new Glacier Creek Road leading to their now idle mine at Rock Creek.

Foster said that he received mixed messages from the community, some opposed to have a road lead to Nome and some in favor of it.

In conclusion, he said, more meaningful community input is needed.

Weight-bearing exercise lowers risk of many diseases

By Bob Lawrence, MD
Alaska Family Doctor

Weight-bearing activities may provide protection against many common ailments including diabetes mellitus, obesity, osteoporosis, and joint injuries. This is important for everyone, including those who may focus on aerobic cardiovascular exercises like running, swimming, or walking but avoid activities that strengthen skeletal muscle like weight lifting or physical labor.

Last year, researchers from the University of California Los Angeles reported the findings from a study showing that low muscle mass, called sarcopenia, was associated with an increased risk of type II diabetes. Obesity is a known risk factor for type II diabetes. The UCLA study of over 14,000 obese and non-obese individuals found that low muscle mass increased a person's risk for high blood sugars, even in people who are thin. The greatest risk was found in people who are obese (BMI > 30) and have a low muscle mass.

Further research suggests that people with diabetes and those hoping to avoid diabetes should mix aerobic activity with weight bearing exercises for optimum protection.

Muscle building also helps with weight loss because muscle cells burn 10 times the number of calories that fat cells burn, even while at rest. Therefore muscle-strengthening exercises that build muscle mass have a long-lasting effect by promoting weight loss long after a person has finished exercising.

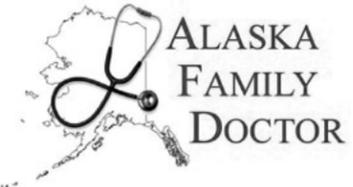

For those at risk, weight-bearing exercises protect against the bone-wasting effects of osteoporosis. Osteoporosis occurs when a person's bones have lost too much calcium. Bones, just like muscles, become stronger with use. The phrase "use it or lose it" applies to muscles and bones alike. This is because the human body responds to increased stress on a bone by laying down more calcium in the bone. Therefore adding weight training to regular exercise over time will make the bone stronger.

Regular weight training, when combined with range-of-motion (stretching) and aerobic activity, helps to strengthen joints. This is because most skeletal muscles cross a joint, and a strong muscle group acts like an internal brace for the joint that the muscle crosses. For example, the knee can be made more stable by strengthening the thigh muscles that cross and move the knee joint. This is why weight-bearing exercises are an important part of preventing joint sprains or rehabilitating a joint after an injury.

Weight training does not require excessive amounts of weight to be effective. Often beginning with five to 10 pounds of weight for basic exercises is sufficient to build muscle. Beginners should seek the help of a trainer or reliable training video to learn proper techniques and avoid injury.

Weight-bearing exercise is most effective when combined with aerobic activities like walking, running, or elliptical training. Doctors think of weight-bearing exercise and aerobic exercise as complementary activities. Weight training and aerobic activity is like having both a rod and reel for fishing. You can get by with just one or the other, but having both just works better. Mixing aerobic activity and weight bearing exercise provides maximum health benefits for protection against many common ailments.

get enough fluoride in their diet, say from naturally occurring fluoride or in water used to manufacture soda pop.

The City of Fairbanks stopped fluoridation July 1 after 50 years, following a task force study of the issue. Juneau ceased fluoridation in January 2007. Opponents of fluoridation say they are being asked to drink water that contains poison with no control over how much is ingested and that it harms rather than hurts youngsters' teeth.

Kelso asserted that the Council should "send that resolution back to Nome Joint Utility." A check with Handeland revealed that no resolution has been sent to the Council from NJUS as yet.

Kelso said when one compares Nome teeth to villagers' where fluoridation is not available; the difference is "night and day."

As for the Fairbanks study, Kelso said that as soon as fluoridation comes up for a vote, the anti-fluoridation people come out with pseudo-scientific arguments against it.

"That hysteria often trumps science," Kelso told the Council. Councilwoman Mary Knodel asked Kelso to provide the Council with documented studies concerning his point of view.

The state Dept. of Health and Social Services has advised a reduction in the amount of fluoride used in water supplies partly based on the amount of fluoride naturally present in water sources. According to Kelso, the amount of fluoride naturally occurring in Nome's supply is zip.

ANTHC would supply equipment and instrumentation to get fluoride back into Nome's water, according to Kelso.

Last week Handeland said that NJUS would be contracting an independent study to verify the amount of fluoride naturally occurring in water from Moonlight Springs. A recent in-house sampling confirmed levels of naturally occurring fluoride at .02 mg/l. levels recommended by the EPA but not the formally adopted range between 0.03 mg/l to .07 mg/l. Adding fluoride to the Nome water system costs about $25,000 for product annually, plus the cost of extra rounds to monitor levels and costs to plow the road to the facility. The issue will come up again at the NJUS regular board meeting on Aug. 16.

The agenda included the following Council actions:

- Voted an ordinance into second reading to approve the City's purchase of two lots at Port of Nome from Alaska Gold for the price of $85,000.
- Voted an ordinance into second reading and final passage to increase the membership of the Port Commission from five to seven members and to set the terms for three years. The Council got into a flap recently with Mayor Denise Michels when they appointed John Bahnke and Jeff Darling to the Commission, contrary to Michels' intent to appoint Darling and Jimmy Adams. The mayor vetoed Bahnke's appointment. The Council then gave Adams the nod.
- Passed a resolution designating water and sewer infrastructure improvements to the Sclaircore system as the community's number one priority for state funding.
- Passed a resolution honoring the achievements of Nome resident Marjorie Tungwenuk Tahbone in being named Miss Indian World.
- Passed a resolution authorizing the City to apply for and participate in a state DOT grant to pay for replacing harbor fenders.
- Set a date of Aug. 31 at 7 p.m. for a hearing on derelict structures targeted for abatement—removal or remedy. Owners will be formally notified.
- Heard Mary Knodel ask the City administration to enforce numbering of houses for easy identification by fire and ambulance crews. Otherwise, the City would apply numbers and add a fee to the tax bills.

For travelers looking for a landmark on the way home by sea, tundra and air, the White Alice towers at Anvil Mountain will likely stay in the picture, according to a notification to the council from Chuck Fagerstrom, president of Sitnasuak Native Corp.

END OF SEASON CATCH – Harry Muktoyuk and Napolion Bergamaschi work hard moving live crab into a holding tank. Crabbing season came to an end on Saturday.

NOME RIVER WEIR—The cumulative counts of salmon species through July 29 at the Nome River weir were 7 kings, 2,743 chums, 7,192 pinks, 1 sockeye and 10 silvers. Salmon escapement goals at the weir are 2,900-4,300 chums and 3,150 pinks (odd-numbered year). The Alaska Dept. of Fish and Game operates the weir with assistance from Norton Sound Economic Development Corp.

Whopping king crab deliveries bring Norton Sound season to early close

By Jim Menard

Alaska Dept. of Fish and Game
The Norton Sound red king crab fishery is ending earlier than any year since the fishery went super-exclusive in 1994, resulting in a small boat fishery. Approximately 322,000 pounds of the 331,150 pound quota in the open access fishery had been delivered through July 29. The guideline harvest level was set at 9 percent this year, but with about 20 boats still to deliver, the final harvest tally is likely to hit 10 percent of the estimated legal male biomass.

Crab fishermen had an amazing year, and the ex-vessel value of the fishery will easily surpass last year's $1.6 million. Congratulations to the crab fleet and kudos to the plant workers at Norton Sound Seafood Products for handling the unprecedented crab loads delivered this year.

Weather was again a factor in fishing decisions last week. A storm that peaked on July 29 prevented most fishermen from getting out to their crab pots, so the department extended the crab season by 30 hours to allow fishermen one last chance to get on the water and get the crab.

Salmon at mid-season

The first half of the salmon season is drawing to a close with another great run of chum salmon. Pinks are coming on late for an odd-numbered year and weaker than expected.

Chinook and sockeye runs were weak as expected, and the silver run is starting out as mediocre.

The commercial salmon catch for Norton Sound through July 29 totals 123 kings, 244 sockeye, 96,001 chums, 6,847 pinks and 4,358 silvers. The chum catch is trailing last year's harvest, but is the second best catch in more than 20 years. The silver salmon harvest is below average (although it's still early) and tracking similar to last year for late July. Pinks made a late showing in the south. Both pinks and silvers spend one year in the ocean, so the hope is that the silvers are just a little late too.

Kotzebue district

The first three weeks of commercial fishing in the Kotzebue district produced the best effort and catches since 1995. The cumulative catch is 113,000 chums for 75 permit holders. Permit holders who haven't participated since the 1990s have been fishing this season. Fishing should peak this week, but Kotzebue's main runway was closed from 9 p.m. July 31 to 6 a.m. Aug. 3, and will be closed from 9 p.m. Aug. 4 to 6 a.m. Aug. 7. The buyer has not yet determined when they will buy fish again. However, an opening was expected sometime Tuesday evening, Aug. 2 to take advantage of the main runway opening on Wednesday morning.

Nomeites celebrate Miss Indian World

Story and photos by Diana Haecker

The sight of colorful kuskpuks, the aroma of delicious home-made food and the beat of Eskimo drumming filled the Nome Rec Center last Friday in honor of Miss Indian World, Marjorie Tahbone. The 22-year-old Nomeite of Inupiaq and Kiowa descent was crowned Miss Indian World at the Gathering of Nations powwow in Albuquerque, New Mexico in April.

Wearing the delicately beaded sash and the Miss Indian World crown — at four pounds it's not a light garment — Tahbone greeted the stream of visitors and posed for photos with Nomeites.

The potluck table sagged under the weight of fish dishes, salads, berries, muktuk, and various other Native foods.

A Native Youth Olympics participant and winner of this year's WEIO contests in stick pull, blanket toss, fish cutting and grease pole, Tahbone emceed a demonstration of other NYO games by coach Hank Irelan's team Jens Irelan, Asaaluk Irelan, Kyle Clark and Andrea Irrigoo.

The King Island dance group performed and dignitaries with Sitnasuak, Bering Straits Native Corporation, Kawerak and Nome Eskimo Community honored Tahbone with speeches.

A silent auction with desserts, cakes, ivory carvings and a qiviut head scarf was held as well. Donations at the event were collected to help Tahbone offset the cost of traveling in her capacity of Miss Indian World. She said she wanted to travel within Alaska but that the pageant organizers do not pay for travel within the winner's home state. "They will fly me London and back, but not to Anchorage," she said, laughing.

For one year, the reigning Miss Indian World gets to travel to different parts of the country and abroad, sharing her message of going out of one's comfort zone and experiencing new things.

The event was sponsored by Sitnasuak, Nome Eskimo Community, NSEDC, Kawerak and Bering Straits Native Corporation.

BALANCING ACT — Andrea Irrigoo gingerly touches the seal skin ball with her toes while balancing on her knuckles, during the celebration held for MIW Marjorie Tahbone on Friday, July 29.

HEAVY — Marjorie Tahbone wears the 4-pound MIW crown.

REACHING HIGH — Tahbone demonstrates the one-arm-reach.

STICK PULL — Tahbone provided commentary to several NYO games. Andrea Irrigoo and Asaaluk Irelan show the stick pull as Kyle Clark and coach Hank Irelan look on.

Ingeborg Tonette Sinnes Handeland

Our beloved Mother, Ingeborg Tonette Sinnes Handeland, died in the evening of July 16. She knew there was a better home waiting for her when her life on Earth was done and was at peace knowing she would soon be with Jesus.

She was born in the rural farming community of Kveven, Norway on April 5, 1923, the second child in a family of seven children. When she was six, her father moved the family to America to try to make a better life for the family. They settled in a rural area near Bellingham, Washington. However, her mother became homesick for Norway and the family moved back to settle on a farm when she was nine.

She had one older brother and five younger siblings whom she helped to take care of when her mother became ill. She has been blessed to have her youngest sister, Erna, living here in Nome for over 40 years.

Ingeborg lived through the invasion of Norway by the Nazis in the 40s. She said the Nazis would take and do whatever they wanted. It was a proud moment to see the Norwegian flag raised again and the singing of the Norwegian national anthem.

Her husband, Kai, was raised in a neighboring town in Norway. He had been working in America, but went to Norway to propose to her. She met back up with him in Nome in June of 1953 after crossing the Atlantic by boat, traveling cross-country by train to Seattle and then by plane to Nome. As she was landing in Nome, she looked down and saw brown cows on the tundra. It gave her a sense of familiarity that was shattered by the realization that these "cows" were actually rusty old barrels on the tundra.

They were married in the Methodist Church on June 6, 1953. Their church, Our Savior Lutheran Church had not been built yet, but when it later was, Mother and Dad were instrumental in the construction of the church and were faithful lifetime members.

They immediately set out for Kougarak where they mined that summer. It was not easy work and they decided to move permanently into town. Kai worked for Alaska Gold and for the City of Nome in the power plant. Ingeborg worked for various people in town and later became a well-loved babysitter to many children.

She considered her friends to be her hobby. She always had a cup of coffee and cookie available as well as some good conversation. She had so many wonderful friends who cherished her as much as she cherished them.

After Kai died in 1987, she stopped babysitting. She concentrated on her expanding family starting in the early 90s and adored her five grandchildren.

Ingeborg loved to travel with trips to all corners of America, Canada, Mexico and Norway. She also enjoyed friends, knitting, crocheting, going to camp, picking berries, cooking for her family, starting plants and tending to her garden.

She loved Nome and the people of Nome. Whenever she was asked if she'd ever move back to Norway, she would reply that Nome was a good place to live and she didn't want to leave it.

Ingeborg went into the hospital on July 3. She had many kind doctors and nurses who took care of her, especially Dr. O'Neill who was just so wonderful in her care of Ingeborg. She was at peace and resting when she passed away there on the 16th.

She is survived by her son John, son Arne and daughter-in-law Dana, and their children Donald Kai, Diana Louise and Erik Jens, daughter Linda and son-in-law Jerry and their kids Lauren Elisabeth and Mark Christian, sister Erna and brother-in-law Leo, and their daughter Amanda and her children Elise, Brandon and Karl Cody, and daughter Kristina and her husband Josh and their son Tylar. Also, she leaves in Norway, sister-in-law Ingjerd, brothers Thom (Froydis), Jarleiv (Karen), Kjell (Berit) and sister Karen (Reidar) and many nieces and nephews.

She was preceded in death by Kai (Kay), her loving husband of 34 years, her parents, Aadne and Amanda Sinnes, brother Sven Sinnes and infant sons, John and Anton.

Caleb Pungowiyi

Alaska Native leader Caleb Pungowiyi, 69, died July 26 after a battle with cancer. He was surrounded by his family in his Wasilla home. Pungowiyi was born and raised on St. Lawrence Island in the village of Savoonga. He is survived by his loving wife Gladys, nine children (Cherissa Weiland, Daphne Tocktoo, Corina Kramer, Cana Crosby, Shayne Schaeffer, Spring Parnell, Marilyn Pungowiyi, Luke Pungowiyi and Henry Pungowiyi), 24 grandchildren and five great-grandchildren.

"Alaska lost a wonderful leader, guide, mentor, and friend," said longtime family friend Henry Huntington of the Pew Environment Group. "Caleb's humor, humility, intelligence, insight, and accomplishments were and are an inspiration for the many that had the privilege of knowing him. As we mourn his loss and grieve with his family, may we also celebrate his life and legacy, remembering that no matter how much we can do by ourselves, we can do much more when we work and laugh with one another."

Pungowiyi was a former President and CEO of the Inuit Circumpolar Council and of Kawerak, Inc. At the time of his death he was employed as a senior advisor with Oceana. He was a strong advocate for incorporation of traditional knowledge into policy and protection of subsistence resources and the way-of-life for Alaska Native people. Pungowiyi lived a life of service and was a member of many boards and committees including: the National Science Foundation Office of Polar Programs Advisory Committee, Marine Mammal Commission's Special Advisor on Native Affairs, Inuit Circumpolar Conference Executive Council, the Steering Committee of the Alaska Native Science Commission, the Polar Research Board Committee on Bering Sea Ecosystems, the Advisory Panel on Arctic Impacts from Soviet Nuclear Contamination, the Native American Rights Fund, the Alaska Coastal Policy Council, the Bering Sea Impact Study (a subcommittee of the International Arctic Science Committee), the Arctic Research Consortium of the U.S., and the Alaska Conservation Foundation.

A funeral service was held July 30 at the First Baptist Church of Anchorage.

Linne W. Rose

Linne Warren Rose was born May 6, 1921 to Linne Wilford and Eva Marion (Wiederhold) Rose in Seattle, Washington and died at the age of 90, on June 28, 2011, at home in Nome.

A perfectionist, stickler, and uncompromising or meticulous worker are words that describe Linne's work and cultural ethics as he lived, set, and accomplished his goals in life.

Linne enlisted in the United States Navy in May 1943 and reenlisted in 1946. During his Navy service, Linne was an instructor, teaching fellow mates the use of the lathe, drill presses, benchwork, layout work, and tool making. Linne was honorably discharged, with the rank of Machinist's Mate Second Class, in August of 1951. Linne received the American Area Campaign Medal and the World War II Victory Medal for his service to his country. At the time of his death he was an active member of the local American Legion Post 9569.

Linne earned his living with his sharp mind and able hands. He used his mechanic, machinist and Navy skills throughout his life in a variety of jobs: bicycle shop owner and operator; Washington Iron Works as a machinist; Northern Commercial Company as a tugboat and barge captain; Lomen's as a superintendent of barge and freight operations; Alaska Cab Garage as head mechanic; as a commercial salmon permit holder with his wife Lilly, he commercial fished for salmon off the beach of Nome; and as shop foreman for Alaska Gold Company from which he retired in 1995.

Linne was fortunate to have fallen in love three times: he married Margaret, who he shared his love with son Linne, Jr.; Betty, who he shared his love with sons Rex and Rene'; and Lilly, who he spent his remaining years with and shared his love with children Kathy, Karen, Sandy and Joel.

Within his Navy personnel records, auto racing was stated as Linne's "leisure time" activity. Leisure is not the description one could apply to the deep, if not obsessive, passion he had for hard top auto racing. Linne was one of the pioneers of modern auto racing, and a member of the Golden Wheels Club, Auto Racing Pathfinders—and a legend of Seattle's old Aurora Speedway. As a racer, he set numerous speed records and amassed many titles and trophies, including Seattle-Tacoma Regional Hard Top Auto Racing Champion. An old Seattle newspaper clipping with his photo bears the caption "Linne Rose, Hard Top Ace, Gets Race Tips By Special Radio."

However, there were many activities that Linne enjoyed that could be labeled as leisure time activities: picking the cleanest blueberries; cooking up the best pot of beans; creating ships with string art; making furniture; picture puzzling; and generally fixing everything that was broken or broke down for family, friends, community members and those tourist marooned on the Nome-Council Road. He truly enjoyed helping people, because it gave him ample opportunity to visit and share his stories.

Linne had much to give to his family and community. He was a member of the Bering Sea Lions Club and received a lifetime membership for his dedicated service. In 2010, he received bib number one for the Bering Sea Lions Club Nome-Golovin-Nome Snowmachine Race. He was a devoted Seattle Seahawks fan, never missing a game, proudly wearing his official NFL Seahawks jacket.

He loved fishing, sharing and passing on his exceptional fishing knowledge to his wife, Lilly, his children and grandchildren. Many in the community looked forward to receiving freshly caught fish from Linne; he made sure the drying racks, frying pan and freezers were full and everyone that needed fish, got fish.

In 1967 Linne received his student pilot certificate, but due to other obligations was unable to receive his pilot's license. He regretted not being able to complete this personal goal. At his request, his remains will be scattered over the Bering Sea by bush plane.

Linne W. Rose is survived by his wife, Lillian; sons Linne (Sandy) Rose, Rex Hall, Rene' (Kathy) Rose and Joel (Monica) Rose; daughters Kathy Holmes, Karen (Jeff) Hadley, and Sandy (Carleton)Tabbone; also many cousins, nephews, nieces, grandchildren and great-grandchildren. He was preceded in death by parents Linne and Eva Rose; brother Royals Rose; mother and father-in-law Louis and Adele Tungwenuk; infant daughter Baby Rose; and granddaughter Adele Tungwenuk Tabbone.

A celebration of life service was held in Nome July 26 at the Our Savior Lutheran Church.

Lawrence Paul Martin

Lawrence Paul Martin II

Nov. 11, 1986 - July 2, 2011

When someone close to us is taken from us suddenly, the pain sometimes seems more than we can bear. And yet, with time, our memories grow more precious, and we come to realize that those we loved live within our hearts.

No one knows the ways of eternity or understanding when those we love leave this earth too soon, before we are ready to say goodbye. But you can be sure of this; that you are in the thoughts of those who care for you. We will miss you always and forever.

Lawrence Paul Martin II was born on November 11, 1986, in Bethel to Lawrence Paul Martin I, and Christine Gladys Martin. The middle of seven siblings, Lawrence was known as JumJum. He was a very outspoken person, and always happy to help family and friends. He loved and took pride in his only daughter, Jacintha Helen Tom. Very active in sports, he loved wrestling and basketball. Lawrence was a very hard worker; he started working as a processor in Nome, and moved up to crabbing on a vessel. Folks enjoyed his company, as he was always there to lend a helping hand when needed. He made sure folks were OK. Well known in his hometown Stebbins, he was a very handsome, strong young man. Lawrence has touched the lives of many family and friends, and all will miss him dearly.

Lawrence's young life was unexpectedly ended July 2. He joins his grandparents, uncle, and niece: Vincent and Alice Martin, John J. Martin, and Avril Martin.

Lawrence Paul Martin II is survived by his loving family Lawrence

P. Martin I, Christine G. Martin, Seth Aparezuk, Louise Martin, Letia Martin, Richard Martin, Vincent Martin, Leroy Martin, Philomena Martin. Grandparents Joseph and Martina Aparezuk and family; nephews Iven Hayden, Cylas, Nieces Shalaeaya, LeAnna, Imagin, Kibbie, Minasuri, and Coraline, Shea, Renee, Deion, Serena, Muriel, Tyhera, Ava. Mary H. Pete

Oct. 11, 1954-July 14, 2011

Mary H. "Dallaq" Pete was born Oct. 11, 1954 to Clyde and Daisy Acoman at Bethel. She attended grade school in St. Michael, and later graduated from Mt. Edgecumbe High. After graduating, she applied to Sheldon Jackson College, was accepted, but her intention to attend was short-lived due to her mother's death.

She became her siblings' caregiver without too much hesitation, as she felt that she was going to be much needed at home more than ever.

Although her wishes to continue her education fell short, there was no abandoning what she would later be thankful for, and that was to watch her sisters grow.

In February 1977, she and Jerome joined hands in marriage at Stebbins, and together adopted and raised two boys, Branson and Jeremy. Much later in their marriage, they decided to adopt another, and Ethan joined the family. Mary's sole offspring, Daisy Lockwood-Katcheak was her only natural daughter.

Mary was an avid reader, loved puzzles, crosswords, and at times, entertained herself at solitaire. She easily made friends wherever her jaunts took her, and would often keep in touch by phone, and or letter writing.

Her friends spanned from Southeast to the Northwest and with a great many from Savoonga, Gambell and Diomed. She often thought of those who made a difference in her life, and would discuss what it was that held her attraction to them. Though she would rather be "in person" next to them, she felt that by being in touch would count just the same.

She felt that friends needed to be part of her life, and kept them with her by mentioning those who touched her the most. Her children, grandchildren, and great-grandchild were very dear to her heart, and she would lovingly speak of them as though they were sitting next to her. Her family came first when it came to everyday living, and in spite of her illness, she continued to make sure that the food was prepared, clothes washed, house cleaned, and gave lectures on what she would want the best for them.

In December 2009, she was diagnosed with colorectal cancer, which later metastasized into liver cancer. In May of 2011, we learned that her illness had spread into her other vital organs, and together we surmised that the inevitable was on its way with no doubt that this was it.

She never uttered a word of remorse, but accepted what life had dealt for her. Words cannot exemplify how grateful we are to: Aunt Judy and Matt McMoore, Aunt Susie Horn, Steven and Cee-Cee Pugh, Beth Conrad, Al and Maggie Wasuli, Merle and Diane Acoman, Phillip Nunooruk, Bibianna Prince, Stephanie and Bibianna Aluska, Dr. Smiley, Quyanna House staff, Shuttle drivers, ERA Alaska, the oncology crew and those of the chemotherapy department all in Anchorage, ERA Alaska staff of Unalakleet. Thank you all so very much! Last but not least, thanks to all those who helped support the family during our loss of our mother, grandmother, great-grandmother, sister, and aunt Mary H. Pete to many nieces and nephews from Stebbins and St. Michael. Thanks to David Mike, who built the beautiful cross, and to Ronald Kirk for the coffin and those who labored for her gravesite. Mary succumbed to her illness on July 14, and was laid to rest on July 18, 2011. We all love and miss you Mary.

Thank you The Martin family would like to thank you all for your loving and caring support, those who brought food, and to the Nome residents, those who called and texted, and those who weren't mentioned, you're not forgotten.

Thanks to Stebbins IRA, Bering Straits Corporation, Bill Moore Slough, Kawerak, Nome Trading Co., Albert Teayoumeak, Albert Bogeyaktuk, Cyril Pete, who assisted and brought our son and brother home to rest. May the good Lord be with us all in our time of loss.

Lawrence Paul Martin II, may you rest in peace, we love you, and we miss you very much.

"The towers are not to be torn down as of now," Fagerstrom told the Council.

The land at the top of the mountain is on the slate for conveyance to the Native group, but before that can happen, the federal Bureau of Land archives.

The museum, chock full of photos, artifacts and archives celebrating the history of the gold rush, Bering Sea Eskimo, military, aviation, and contemporary history and Bering Strait region, is currently overflowing a 1,000-foot square basement of the library in a 42-year-old building located on the south side of Front Street in the flood plain where the collection is under risk of high water from roiling Bering Sea storms. The need for a safer facility occupied the top of Nome's list of 2011 Legislative capital projects funding priorities.

Some sites under consideration are the Sitnasuak lot on Front Street across from BOT; a piece of land on the north side of Front Street lying east of the Pioneer Hall; Alaska Gold Co. land at the end of Steadman that was previously under consideration for the ill-fated state building; on River Street; a piece of land that lies under the Wien Building and The Nome Nugget newspaper office. (Editor's note: The land under the Nome Nugget newspaper is not for sale.) The original intention to put the building on Anvil Square by Old

St. Joes has been discarded following public outcry at the idea to limit play space on the green. Finding a site is at the top of the list in this phase.

"The first issue is to first establish the location and that helps to refine the design, Charley Lean, museum commissioner said.

The effort to secure funding began in earnest in 1993 as part of planning for the Nome Centennial Celebration and is coming to fruition with plans for a building of 14,500 square feet.

A NICE SUMMER DAY— Nome was ready to wake up to a sunny day last week, with the Korean icebreaker Aron anchored in deeper waters for a few days as researchers onboard enjoyed some R&R on land.

VISITORS FROM AFAR— Nine members of the Turkish Traveler's Club visited Nome on their way to Chukotka. Holding the balloon on the top right is Prof. Dr. Orhan Kural. TRAVEL TO EXOTIC DESTINATIONS— Nine members of the exclusive Turkish Travelers' Club recently were the first of their country to travel from Alaska to Russia via the Bering Strait, albeit not by boat or other adventurous vessels, but via Bering Air. Professor Dr. Orhan Kural, a mining professor at the Istanbul Technical University, and president of the illustrious Turkish Traveler's Club boasted to have already visited 226 countries, writing books, having his own radio program and two TV travel shows in Turkey. The group came via Anchorage and Fairbanks to Nome and was traveling from Nome to Provideniya for one night. Orhan said in an interview with The Nome Nugget that he guides those groups to exclusive destinations in the world, off the beaten path and yet unspoiled by mass tourism. He said their aim is to see with their own eyes authentic lifestyles of the countries they are visiting and building bridges between theirs and other countries.

JOURNEY TO HEAL— A woman from Anacortes, Washington is planning to walk from Point Hope, Alaska to Chile to document personal stories of how people deal with personal suffering. Marissa Krupa has lost her brother to astrocytoma cancer tumors and her mother was diagnosed with the same disease. Krupa founded the SpokenCoast project in which she said in a press release, she will collect stories of transformation and inspire her own healing by climbing six mountain peaks along the way.

KITE TO SET RECORDS— Three kite boarders, brothers Geza and Andre Scholtz of Switzerland, and Constantin Bisanz of Austria, trying to be the first kite boarders to cross the Bering Strait from the American side to Russia, made their first attempt last Friday. They and their support crew went from Teller to Wales, but then were turned back by bad weather and stormy seas in their try to cross the Bering Strait. Last year they also had to abort their mission to kite board across the Strait.
