NO UFO's— Lenticular clouds formed over Newton Peak on Friday, May 17. When stable moist air flows over a mountain, a series of large-scale standing waves may form on the down-wind side. Lenticular clouds sometimes form at the crests of these waves.

Port Commission: Snake River dredging creeps ahead

By Sandra L. Medearis

Pacific Pile and Marine of Seattle stuck in a thumb and pulled out a plum, winning a bid to build a high ramp and for dredging in preparation of adding floats to the harbor at Port of Nome.

Pacific Pile, with an office in Anchorage, bid $3,855,509 to complete the work.

It will entail dredging the west side of the Snake River to minus four feet and constructing a small "C" cell as a high ramp to facilitate on-and off-loading.

Dredging the Snake will expand moorage for subsistence, mining dredges and other smaller craft.

The Pacific Pile bid was snug with engineers' estimates, Joy Baker, Nome's port project director, told Nome Port Commission at a work session May 16.

The commission accepted the bid.

The commission forwarded the low bid to Nome Common Council to consider for approval at a special meeting scheduled for noon May 23. Contractors will finish the work in the 2013 construction season.

Three other companies made pitches for the work—Pro West Contractors, $4,366,000; MKB Constructors, $4,480,000; STG, Inc., $4,614,645.

In other port business, the City of Nome has appealed a FEMA award of money to repair the Cape Nome Jetty, known also as Cape Nome Quarry Dock, damaged by storms in fall 2011.

This is the storm cited by Delta Western as partially responsible for their fuel delivery not making it to Nome in Nov. 2011.

Dept. of Homeland Security issued an award announcement in February citing an amount of $336,639.

That amount is too little money to address the critical repair needs of the jetty and dock structures and return them to pre-storm condition, Joy Baker, port of Nome official said in a letter to John W. Madden of DHS.

The repairs will cost $1.5 million, according to information from engineers contracted by City of Nome.

The City seeks an additional $200,000 to improve the structure to prevent future storm damages to the jetty.

The facility is necessary for supplying materials for projects along the coast of Western Alaska for building roads, airports, jetties and developing uplands, Baker said.

The partial funding award did not address all the damage, according to Baker, who said ice forming at the water line in November precluded a thorough inspection.

The City had several inspections after breakup in spring and summer 2012 and submitted updated damage assessments by PND Engineers of Anchorage to DHS/FEMA by deadlines, according to Baker.

The City seeks a new award determination for $1.548 million to make full repairs plus a reimbursement of $170,000 spent by Bering Straits Native Corp. for emergency repairs to avoid additional damage to the facility.

The City has approached the U.S. Army Corps of Engineers seeking a reconnaissance study at federal expense, a preliminary feasibility study on lengthening the causeway to deeper water at minus 35 feet from the average low water line to meet increasing Bering Strait and port traffic in terms of national security and environmental emergency services.

If the reconnaissance study develops federal interest in the project, then a full-blown feasibility study would require the City to share the total cost at 50 percent.

The port expansion would favor increased efficiency in rural Western Alaska logistical support, Mayor Denise Bahnke wrote in her letter to USCOE.

Improvements to the Port of Nome would bring more economically resource development from the private sector's operations and result in stimulus to the region's economy, she added.

Roads to be upgraded in East Nome

By Diana Haecker

In an open house meeting hosted by the Nome Eskimo Community, engineers with Bristol Engineering Services Corporation outlined plans to upgrade roads between K and N Street, and Third and Sixth avenues.

Nome Eskimo Community as a tribe has a Bureau of Indian Affairs inventory of roads which fall into its governance area and federal monies are available to improve them.

Bristol engineers Isaac Pearson and John Blees traveled to Nome last week to gather the information, but there were only a few Nomeites who found their way through the mid-May snowstorm to the Nome Eskimo building on Wednesday evening, May 15.

The engineers had hoped to hear input from residents on what ought to be incorporated in the designs.

"We are in the preliminary design phase and hope to get the landowner's and resident's input on drainage, access and surface issues," Pearson said.

The lack of public participation concerned the engineers and they encourage Nome residents to fill out public comment worksheets.

The stated goal is to improve those 1.8 miles of roads with better road surface, better drainage and also include dust reduction by surfacing the roads with recycled asphalt pavement.

While a time line was not available, Blees said that the roads would

Winter shows no sign of leaving

White is still the predominant color in the area and with temperatures to match, people on the Seward Peninsula begin to question if spring is about to arrive at all this year.

This month, some call it May-ember, has broken four records for cold temperatures and snowfall so far.

On Monday, Nomeites awoke to a couple of inches of fresh snow on the ground and kids used the opportunity to build new snowmen. While the white glory turns into mush during warmer day temperatures, more snow was in the forecast for this week.

Jerry Steiger with the National Weather station in Nome said that last week broke two records for low temperatures.

May 14 broke the record with a low temperature of 8°F, beating the previously set record of 10°F in 1939 and May 17 also saw a low temperature of 8°F, beating the 9°F record set in 1959.

Steiger said the average temperature in May is 40°F for high temper-

Letters

To people of Gambell,
Whale Riders Day has been declared by IRA Council as a holiday in memory of the Whale Riders Crew, who perished at sea, April 27, 2005. They were helping tow the whale that was caught that day, so the village could have subsistence food.
Whale Riders Day is not meant for the village to have Jack Pot Bingo. It is not meant for governing bodies to have paid holiday. Remember the boat captain was a mayor of Gambell. Also it is not meant for people to have drinking parties.
Whale Riders were human beings just like anyone else. They were Gambell residents, like we are.
Your actions of doing these things written above make us, the families, even more saddened. We always respect the people who passed away because we too will someday pass away, like they do. Consider this, what would you do and how would you feel if your loved one passed away accidentally and was not found? You would not want to have parties, bingo and drinking going on.
Even though you hurt us by your actions, deeply hurt us, we forgive you, because our Lord Jesus Christ told us to forgive those who hurt us.
But please no more bingo, paid holiday and drinking parties on Whale Riders Day, April 27, in the future.
From the Whale Riders, families, The Nowpakahoks and Ugloooks

Don't Ignore Us

The United States is a member of the United Nations Arctic Council and as policy is being set it is of vital importance to the residents of the communities of the Bering Sea coast and all our Arctic towns and villages to sit up and pay attention. We are the United States' reason to take a leadership role in the Council. We also remember the Exxon Valdez disaster.
We have a responsibility to insist that our federal government oversees the stewardship of our vital interests in protecting our environment and making certain that resource development is done in a responsible way with stringent regulations and strict enforcement. This must occur on an international basis. We don't want a developmental free-for-all or an environmental disaster. We cannot allow an oil spill in the Arctic. Not ever. Those of us who are residents of Alaska's Arctic and Bering Sea communities get a little nervous when we think that policies that impact our backyard are being made thousands of miles away by folks who have never been to the Arctic and wouldn't know a polar bear if it bit them in the butt, and don't know the difference between a salmon and a sardine. We need to have our Arctic policy makers include us in the group and come to the Arctic, visit Little Diomed, Wales, Shishmaref, Nome, Kotzebue and communities to the north.
Too often federal officials come to see Alaska and only visit Anchorage. While Anchorage is a nice town, it is not the real Alaska and visitors go away with an incomplete understanding of our lovely state. In Nome we are fond of saying, "If you are in Anchorage you are almost in Alaska." So, Arctic Council, come meet in the Alaska's Arctic.

Sound Off

By Ray Metcalfe

If Senate Bill 21 is not repealed it will soon be goodbye dividends, and hello income tax.
The money Senate Bill 21 gives back to BP, ConocoPhillips, and Exxon will leave Alaska with about the same amount of income Alaska had from oil in 2002 when the discontinuation of dividends and re-imposition of the income tax was the primary issue of the 2002 Governor's Race.
According to the US Department of Energy, the average tax charged by countries around the world for taking a barrel of their oil is about 79 percent of the cash remaining for distribution between oil companies and governments after all expenses of production and delivery for that barrel have been deducted from its sale proceeds and paid. According to the US Department of Energy's calculation, take-home profits for companies like BP, ConocoPhillips, and Exxon average about 21 percent of what's left over after expenses.
Governor Parnell, in a speech to oil industry workers, stated Alaska's combined federal, state and local tax was taking 72 percent of the remaining distributable cash prior to the passage of Senate Bill 21. What Parnell didn't say was that Alaska's federal state and local take was 7 percent below the international average; he just said it was too much.

Senate Bill 21 will leave Alaska somewhere between 20 and 25 percent below the international average and teetering on bankruptcy. Senate bill 21 will give BP, ConocoPhillips, and Exxon close to 45 percent of the distributable cash remaining after expenses; over twice their expected international average. Remember that year every Alaskan got a $3,200 dividend? That happened because Governor Sarah Palin put an extra billion dollars into our Permanent Fund dividend. If the approximate one and one half to two billion dollars Senate Bill 21 gives to the oil companies were given to Alaskans instead, every Alaskan would be getting between four and five thousand dollars per year.
Unfortunately Parnell and the Legislature chose to favor BP, ConocoPhillips, and Exxon with one and one half to two billion dollars and you are likely to lose your dividend and get slapped with a big fat tax because they did.
Ray Metcalfe was in the Alaska State Legislature in the 1970s and 80s and has been studying, writing and lecturing to educate Alaskans on the value of Alaska's resources for over 25 years. He can be reached at 907-344-4514

Arctic Council admits new observers

Ministers from the eight Arctic states and the permanent participants from Arctic Indigenous peoples that make up the Arctic Council gathered for the biennial ministerial meeting in Kiruna, Sweden last week. Secretary of State John Kerry and his predecessor Hillary Clinton as well as Alaska Senator Lisa Murkowski attended the high-level meeting.

The meeting marked the end of Sweden’s two-year chairmanship of the Council. Canada took over chairmanship.

In 2015, it will the United States’ turn to assume chair of the Arctic Council.

The Arctic Council decided to allow six non-Arctic nations to have observer status: China, India, Italy, Japan, Singapore and South Korea.

With melting ice caps and the possibility of faster shipping routes from Europe to Asia, these countries have sought economic opportunities in the Arctic.

Through observer status, they hope to influence the decisions of its permanent members.

The European Union also applied as an observer, but its final status remained unresolved pending resolution of a dispute with Canada over trade in seal products.

Senator Murkowski told the Nome Nugget that permanent observers have a permanent invitation to attend any and all Arctic council meetings –including the working group meetings – but they have no voting power, which is frustrating to some of them. “They can send their staff to meetings and their staff can provide input into the working groups, the task force, and the reports so that their voices are heard – but we don’t believe that non-Arctic nations should have a hand on the wheel to directly steer Arctic policy,” Murkowski said.

The Arctic Council states signed a new legally binding agreement of co-operation on marine oil pollution preparedness and response in the Arctic.

Senator Lisa Murkowski also told the Nome Nugget that she had the chance to meet with Iceland’s President Grímsson, who co-founded a new forum with Alice Rogoff, called the Arctic Circle.

Murkowski and Grimsson agree that the Arctic Circle forum should complement the Arctic Council, not compete with it by bringing in non-Arctic entities like industries or non-governmental organizations.

Greenland’s Premier Aleqa Hammond boycotted the meeting. Hammond said that Greenland should have its own voting seat at the Council. Greenland is an autonomous country within the Kingdom of Denmark, and Denmark, not Greenland, is a signatory to the declaration that established the Arctic Council in 1996.

Coast Guard focuses Arctic Shield 2013 on Bering Strait

The Coast Guard 17th District announced last week that they will focus on Western Alaska and the Bering Strait to increase maritime domain awareness during the 2013 Arctic Shield operation.

Last year, the Coast Guard concentrated their Arctic Shield efforts on the North Slope and Barrow.

“The Coast Guard will have several surface assets in the region including both of its ice breakers,” said Rear Admiral Thomas Ostebo. “The Coast Guard Cutter Healy will conduct its science missions and will partner with the Coast Guard Research and Development Center to evaluate equipment, and the Coast Guard Cutter Polar Star will test the overall readiness of the icebreaker and crew.”

A national security cutter will also be deployed as a command and control platform to conduct various missions including maritime domain awareness, search and rescue and law enforcement.

The forward operating location will be based at the Alaska National Guard hangar in Kotzebue.

“In 2012, there were an estimated 480 transits through the Bering Strait,” said Sanial. “Deploying our helicopter and personnel to Kotzebue will give us an opportunity to leverage existing infrastructure and will strategically position us to conduct standard operations and effectively respond to maritime emergencies.”

To help develop and integrate the Coast Guard into existing Arctic international, federal and state policy forums, the Coast Guard hired a full-time Arctic planner to ensure Coast Guard activities are aligned more efficiently to address interests in the region.

“This year we’re going to deploy a patrol boat to test its operational capability in a new and challenging environment,” said Sanial. “Our goal is to find the right mix of resources with the right capabilities to effectively operate in an area with limited infrastructure and extreme weather challenges.”

A Coast Guard buoy tender and the Canadian coast guard will test a state of Alaska emergency towing system and a vessel of opportunity skimming system.

A spill of national significance seminar and a mass rescue workshop are also planned to identify potential opportunities for improvement in preparedness and response to a maritime emergency.

Rear Adm. Ostebo will hold a presentation on the Coast Guard’s seasonal Nome plans on Thursday, May 23, at 10 a.m. at Nome’s City Hall.

Governor rolls out exploration proposal

Last week Governor Sean Parnell announced an exploration proposal for the Arctic National Wildlife Refuge 1002 Area, which the state has developed and is offering to help finance. The proposal is called the “Oil & Gas Resource Evaluation & Exploration Proposal for the ANWR 1002 Area,” and was produced by the Alaska Division of Oil and Gas.

The report details a seven-year seismic and exploration program to provide a much more definitive assessment of the magnitude of oil and gas resources within the 1002 Area.

Parnell outlined the proposal in a letter sent to Interior Secretary Sally Jewell. He and Department of Natural Resources Commissioner Dan Sullivan rolled out the 187-page document during a press event at the U.S. Chamber of Commerce headquarters in Washington, D.C. In his letter to Secretary Jewell, Governor Parnell offered to request up to $50 million from the Alaska Legislature to support the seismic program contained in the proposal.

U.S. Senator Mark Begich expressed support for Parnell’s plan. House Representative Don Young was pleased as well and said, “I hope that Secretary Jewell takes this good faith effort by the State of Alaska into full consideration as the Department of Interior updates its ANWR Comprehensive Conservation Plan.”

Arctic Slope sees late spring whaling

The Arctic Sounder reports that poor weather and lack of open water has delayed spring whaling for most crews on the Arctic Slope.

Point Lay, Wainwright and Barrow have not even started whaling yet due to unfavorable winds that have thwarted attempts to launch whaling hunts.

St. Lawrence Island community of Savoonga has landed four whales and has lost two.

Point Hope and Gambell have also started their spring whaling season.

PLANNING— Bristol engineers John Blees, left, and Isaac Pearson, right, take comments from Nome resident Steffen Verdin during an open house event at Nome Eskimo Community on Wednesday, May 15. Verdin was one of only three Nomeites who made it to the event.

be improved once the Nome Joint Utilities have completed water and sewer main upgrades.

Mike Erdman, with CE2 engineers working on the NJUS project, said that NJUS work was completed on Fourth Avenue and Third Avenue between K and N Street and sections of M and L Streets in 2012. This year, NJUS aims to tackle the whole length of N Street, a section of M Street and Fifth Avenue from M Street eastward.

NJUS manager John Handeland said utility upgrade construction is slated to begin on May 28 with work on N Street. Construction will then move to one block on Fifth Avenue, M Street, then M between Fifth and Fourth avenues, and finally two short segments north of N Street on Fourth and Fifth avenues.

NJUS also plans to work on a segment between G and I on Sixth Avenue if weather and time allow.

"Our plan is to start May 28 and hopefully, the cold temperatures and snow that has still been upon us will subside," Handeland wrote in an email to the Nugget.

NJUS still has to finish up some work on last year's projects.

Handeland noted that rainy weather hampered last year's construction efforts. Due to the weather, the gravel contractor was not able to provide sufficient quantities of topping last fall to meet the entire need, Handeland explained.

This made it difficult to get surfaces compacted properly prior to freeze-up.

"There is definitely permafrost thawing and that has affected the underground utilities on the east end," he wrote.

He added that the replacement materials are rigid jacketed pipes with more beam strength, which hold up better than the soft-shelled pipe that were installed nearly 30 years ago. "We also excavate a little more to try to get to thaw-stable material before we refill and install a fiber cloth as well to better hold materials in place," Handeland described.

Bristol engineers are working on the design to improve the entire length of Sixth Avenue from Steadman Street to N Street, the entire length of east N Street, East M Street between Third and Fifth Avenue, and Fourth Avenue and Third Avenue between K Street and N Street.

The degree of improvements varies. Sixth Avenue between Steadman and K Street will see only resurfacing; the other roads will be fully repaired. This includes the installation of ditches and culverts to get water off the street, people's yards and into the storm water collection system.

Plans are to surface the roads with recycled asphalt pavement to cut down dust.

The tricky part, Blees said, is to deal with unstable soil beneath the roads which cause heaving, potholes and the occasional break in the water main.

Asked about the possibility for sidewalks — most of the roads about to see improvements are around the Nome Elementary School and see heavy student foot and bike traffic — the engineers cringed.

The unstable thermal regime beneath the pavement would make the concrete sidewalks heave and crack.

Steve Soenksen, Safe Routes to School Coordinator with the Alaska

Dept. of Transportation, said that while curbs and sidewalks are a good way to separate kids from the traffic, it's not always the answer to the problem. "Concrete, paved sidewalks aren't always the best solution," Soenksen said.

Nome Eskimo Community has identified safe routes to school as one of their priorities.

With an upcoming grant, planning consultants are at the ready to gather data in order to devise a plan for safer school routes in Nome.

According to Soenksen, who talked with city officials and the DOT, the first step is to create a task force to help get the project started.

atures and in the 30's for low temperatures.

Steiger said while it's not really completely out of the ordinary to see snowfall in May, the average date for the last snow to hit the ground is around May 14.

This year, however, was different.

May 15 saw a snowstorm that deposited 1.9 inches of snow, breaking the record.

May 19 also saw a record snowfall with 0.8 inches.

The winter season started with low snow cover and, is well below the average snow cover with a measured 58.5 inches.

Last winter saw an accumulated snowfall of 80.6 inches. The normal average snow cover is 74.9 inches.

In terms of temperatures, this winter didn't see any extremes, but 2012/2013 will into the history books as an average winter temperature-wise.

Unusual this year is just that winter is taking longer to leave and make room for spring and summer.

Nome is not alone with its lingering winter blues. Statewide winter maintains its grip on Alaska as Anchorage reported snow, as did Fairbanks. The Nenana Ice Classic fell on May 20, breaking the previous record by three hours, set in 1964. The tripod toppled on the Tanana River on Monday, May 20 at 2:41 p.m. A couple from Kenai claimed the $318,000 jackpot.

As of press time on Monday, a winter storm advisory was in effect for the northern Seward Peninsula. People were cautioned that travel conditions are less than ideal.

In Kotzebue, over 70 search and rescue personnel are still conducting a ground and air search for two snowmachiners traveling from Kotzebue to Selawik on May 15.

They have not yet been found.

Troopers report that a search party found 28-year-old Thomas Olanna, who was overdue returning to Brevig Mission by four-wheeler from Nome. A S&R team found him stuck in overflow and ice. Olanna was in good health and was escorted back to Brevig Mission.

"We have to remember where we live," Steiger said, alluding to the fickle temperament of Arctic weather.

"We also have to realize that May is a transition month and it can be either dry and nice or snowy," he said.

Projects point to faster, cheaper Internet service

By Sandra L. Medearis

A large backbone of multiplex fiber optic cable will pass our shores, zooming from London to Tokyo, just as Route 66 went the distance from Chicago to LA.

Any Internet service provider can hook up once the spurs from the cable come ashore to hubs. This is predicted to happen in a couple of years.

The Nome Common Council convened a work session May 14 before its regular meeting to learn the plan that Quintillion Networks has for delivering high speed Internet to be available in Nome in 2015. The next day, Quintillion held an open house to explain the project to interested government agencies, health and education providers and residential users. The session was well attended.

Quintillion is an Alaska company building a local fiber optic cable network as an alternative to current satellite communications. Another company, Arctic Fiber, Inc., is building a 9,424-mile northern subsea cable running from London, along the Northwest Passage, through the Bering Strait to Tokyo. Quintillion, operating as a middle-mile carrier, plans to build spurs from the cable to serve several places in Alaska: Nome, Kotzebue, Barrow, Wainwright and Prudhoe Bay.

Representatives say Quintillion's

Alaska project to build spurs to northern and northwestern communities from the AFI backbone will provide more economical Internet service and global broadband access at virtually unlimited speed. Quintillion will bring the spur to the shores; local communications providers will distribute the service to customers. Tel-Alaska will hook up for Nome. The Quintillion technical team also includes Arctic Slope Telephone, OTZ Telephone, New Horizons Telecom, Umiat and Alaska Communications.

Brenda Shepherd of TelAlaska said she expects competition to keep prices down. Quintillion said the price to local providers for hooking up will be economical, also helping to keep consumer prices down.

Quintillion CEO Elizabeth Pierce, addressing Nome Common Council, said services might expand beyond the landing communities once distribution infrastructure is developed with local providers.

Fiber optic cable provides much faster and lower cost connections to the Internet than satellite, she said, enhancing a community's access to education, telemedicine providing diagnosis, treatment and research, increased efficiency of government services and enhanced communications or first responders during emergencies.

The high-speed service represents a big change in what communities could do with technology, Sarah Barton, Quintillion's strategy officer said.

Education about the system would enable consumers to plan ahead for new and innovative uses, giving people time to leverage the new technology when it rolls out in 2015.

The project is in the design and permitting phase.

The next phase will entail working on plans to build out once there are hub landings identified.

"It changes the thinking of business on what they can do," Pierce said. "With virtually unlimited access, you have to think about what you can do in 2015 that you cannot do now."

"Users will be able to pay less for the same service they have now or get more service for the same amount they pay now," Pierce predicted.

Tour company owner Richard Beneville popped in during the open house at Nome City Hall.

Roald Amundsen came to Nome by boat, followed by [Umberto] Nobile by dirigible, he observed.

"Now we have Quintillion. You are in the footsteps of Amundsen," Beneville quipped.

Indeed, bringing the spur unscathed from the fiber optic backbone would present a unique issue coming through offshore gold dredging activities.

Quintillion would meet with the mining community to determine an acceptable corridor and bury the cable, Pierce told the council.

At the same council meeting May 14, a press release from GCI with information on their TERRA Project appeared in the Council meeting packets.

GCI announced that it had completed a significant portion of the expansion of a terrestrial broadband network into Northwest Alaska Phase 1 of the TERRA NW initiative, which includes the installation of five new microwave towers and three remote repeaters, connects the network in Shageluk to Unalakleet and Shaktoolik. Phase 2 will bring the system 135 miles from Shaktoolik to Nome. Phase 3 will take the system 205 miles between Shaktoolik and Kotzebue.

GCI thinks the system will be available in Nome at the end of the year and into Kotzebue at the end of 2014.

TERRA-Northwest connects to TERRA-Southwest, a terrestrial middle-mile project connecting 65 remote communities in Bristol Bay and the Yukon Delta.

TERRA-Southwest is a hybrid fiber-optic cable/microwave system, an alternative to satellite technology that over land connects rural Alaska to the Internet Gateway in Anchorage.

Based on information from the two companies, it would seem that Western Alaska health, education and safety agencies as well as residential Internet users will have expanded options in the offing.

• Port

the commission discussed the need for port expansion in relation to money available. They concluded during the work session they have more work than money on the table.

Several funding possibilities are afoot. A pot of $5 million has been assured.

After funding the high ramp and the first stage of increasing the number of Snake River float facilities for about $4 million, the Port of Nome has $1 million left in the kitty to put toward port expansion.

The account for the first half received has about $5 million left from Nome's $10 million share from a government obligation bond floated by voters last November. Plans are to use the remaining $5 million towards plugging the gap with a middle dock sheet pile wall extension between City Dock and WestGold Dock open cells at the causeway.

The commission discussed abbreviating plans for the middle dock citing the expectation that funding in the immediate future from state and federal sources did not seem plentiful.

A complete and useable middle dock could be constructed on a reduced scale with less funding.

Money sought from the legislature was not approved, according to PND engineer Garth Howlett who met with the commission May 16. Even a pulled-back design would cost $8 million or $9 million, according to Baker.

The state has not held a bond sale that includes Nome's second $5 million.

"Maybe we have time to target more funds," Baker told the commission.

Paul Fuhs, Nome's port development consultant, attended the meeting by phone.

Another government bond issue to provide more money next year depended on whether Port of Anchorage could "get their act together" to seek more money, Fuhs said.

"We could ride in on that," he said.

Commissioner Jim West, Jr. brought up using the $5 million to develop the inner harbor with Phase II.

A bill is in the legislature to have a portion of lease sales and revenue from offshore gold mining come to Nome from state Dept. of Resources, Josie Bahnke, city manager, told the commission.

Baker suggested that the Port of Nome could develop the south half of the inner harbor with the money, but that users in that area did not generate a high revenue stream.

She has received comment from some who said they hoped the City did not put too much money into the Snake River development, as the gold rush [and its glut of small dredges] would pass.

Baker said the middle dock work is on the 2014 worktable. As for the high ramp and dredging by Pacific Pile, the Council approval process and contract phase would preclude the contractor getting supplies onto the first barge. With supplies arriving on the second barge, Baker expected to see Pacific Pile and Marine equipment in the harbor by August for a completion this season.

Nicole Long, former assistant harbormaster, has been promoted to harbormaster while Baker has taken charge of port expansion projects.

School is almost over, school board tying up business

By Kristine McRae

As the school year comes to a close, the students and teachers of Nome are looking forward to summer break. The school board and Nome's district office staff are also winding down, though they still have some work to do. In their regular meeting last Tuesday, superintendent Steve Gast and members of the school board discussed priority issues, including an adjournment toward the end of the meeting to discuss the on-going NEA negotiations.

During public comments, Todd Hindman, principal of the Anvil City Science Academy, addressed the board about the need to expand the charter school so that more students could attend. ACSA currently has 44 students; 11 in each grade from fifth to eighth. After completing the application and lottery process, there are 36 students on the waiting list for next year. Hindman referred to earlier discussions with the board about expanding the space at Beltz to accommodate more students, which would require developing a budget and consideration for effects on other programs. Hindman suggested that an increased enrollment at the charter school could eliminate a teacher at the elementary school. "We need to be thinking about it and get the ball rolling. To find the best teacher possible the process needs to happen early," Hindman said. Discussions for the expansion were stalled when former superintendent Brawner left his position in early March and the board turned attentions toward filling the position. Superintendent Steve Gast indicated that he would, along with the board, look into the matter.

Nome-Beltz principal Scott Handley introduced Sonja Hukill as April's student of the month. "Her teachers describe Sonja as a positive student and a good role model," Handley said. In other junior high news, Handley reported that the eighth grade students attended a three-day vocational academy at NACTEC, where they learned about jobs from culinary arts to heavy equipment operation. April's student of the month at the high school was Russell Smith. Lieutenant colonel Robert Blake of the JROTC described Smith as a "hard worker and an all-around, well-rounded, good guy." In his four years at Beltz, Smith has been a member of the band and Spanish club, a varsity wrestler for three years, and the battalion commander for JROTC. Smith plans to study civil engineering at the University of Alaska Fairbanks in the fall.

Summer school will run from June 3-27, Monday through Thursday. Caleb Weaver will again teach the high school program, which will include the on-line APEX credit recovery program. The board will meet next in a work session on May 28.

Second graders' salmon project

By Natallie Tobuk

We observed the salmon since last fall. We watched them grow from eyed eggs, to alevins, to fry. We made a diorama of the Salmon Project for the Science Fair.

By Asa Hukill

The salmon were in the eyed egg stage when we got them. The salmon looked at me like they were watching me every time I checked the water temperature.

Then when they grew up, they were scared of me a lot. They never got used to me at all.

By Brenna Scholten

When our class first got the salmon eggs, they were in the eyed egg stage. Some of the eyed eggs died. The color of dead salmon eggs is pale. In 2012, the eyed eggs formed into alevins. In 2013, the alevins formed into fry.

Should you be on a gluten free diet?

By Bob Lawrence, MD

Going gluten-free has become a popular choice for people looking for ways to eat a healthy diet. For most people, the choice of whether or not to eat gluten is a matter of personal preference, but according to research out of the Mayo Clinic a large number of Americans may have a disorder that makes gluten harmful. Even worse, most affected individuals do not know they have the disease.

Medically speaking, gluten can cause serious problems in people who have Celiac Sprue, a genetic condition of gluten intolerance. In a person with Celiac disease gluten causes a destruction of the cells in the intestinal lining that are needed for the absorption of nutrients like fats, vitamins, and proteins.

Patients with Celiac Sprue often suffer from stomach cramps, diarrhea, and malnutrition after eating breads, cereal, or pasta. The condition can also be associated with dermatologic diseases like dermatitis herpetiformis (an intensely itchy rash), metabolic disorders like diabetes mellitus type I, or neurologic problems secondary to poor absorption of calcium.

Mayo Clinic researchers estimate that less than 1 percent of the US population, roughly 1.8 million Americans, currently suffer from Celiac disease. So the overall burden of disease is still low.

But this does not mean the problem is unimportant. To those who have Celiac disease, diagnosis and treatment of the disorder can be life restoring. The problem is that most affected people do not know they have the disease. Only 1 in 4 people with the disorder has been diagnosed according to the researchers.

A somewhat larger group of people have a sensitivity or allergy to gluten or one of the proteins found in wheat or similar grains. Symptoms of a wheat protein allergy range from itchy eyes and hives to wheezing and possible anaphylactic shock. A form of asthma, called baker's asthma, results from a susceptible person's breathing wheat or other flour dust.

A puzzling subset of people has an exercise-induced wheat allergy. This disorder only affects susceptible individuals if they exercise right after eating wheat-containing foods.

The primary treatment for any medical disorder related to gluten ingestion is avoidance of wheat-containing products. Fortunately lowering the intake of gluten in the diet has become easier due to the current popularity of gluten-free products, though a true gluten-free diet still requires significant forethought.

Some healthcare advocates recommend a "gluten-free" diet even for people without a medical reason to avoid gluten. Gluten has become a ubiquitous part of the American diet and is likely a contributor to the obesity epidemic. Removing gluten from the diet may lead to increased energy, better quality sleep, and easier weight loss.

These claims come from varied sources and hard to prove. It is true that gluten, a natural protein found in wheat, barley, and rye grains, is found throughout the American diet in breads, cereals, baked goods, and processed foods where wheat gluten is used as a thickening agent.

It is also true that many people on a gluten-free diet feel better and lose weight. But most people lose weight and feel better not because they have accommodated an underlying sensitivity to gluten but because avoiding gluten requires a person to replace high-carbohydrate foods with vegetables and high-fiber grains other than wheat. It is likely that these same people would lose weight and feel better by simply increasing their intake of vegetables while decreasing their intake of simple carbohydrates.

It is also important to remember that sensitivity to other foods can cause gastrointestinal problems. A gluten-free diet will not help if symptoms are secondary to an unrelated intolerance of milk, nuts, or eggs.

For this reason, if you think you have a problem with gluten or wheat products, ask your doctor about simple tests to determine your specific risk of allergy or intolerance.

Before your visit, you may find it helpful to keep a food diary in which you record the specific foods you eat and the symptoms you experience after eating these foods. This diary will become an invaluable tool for you and your provider if together you decide to initiate a food elimination program.

ADF&G reports record winter red king crab harvest

By Diana Haecker

Alaska Dept. of Fish and Game's Nome office reports that the winter commercial crabbing season ended on May 15 with both record harvest and record prices paid out to commercial crabbers. Jim Menard, Nome and Kotzebue area biologist with ADF&G in Nome said that 22,630 crabs at 62,158 pounds were harvested and buyers paid crabbers $6.73 per pound. Menard said 26 out of 34 registered crabbers delivered to three buyers, namely Norton Sound Seafood Products, Robin Thomas and Frank McFarland.

This winter's commercial crab fishery was worth $402,047, Menard said. The total landings of pots were 493

Last year saw a winter commercial harvest of 9,157 crabs (24,142 pounds) at a price of $6.47 per pound. The total value of the winter crab fishery was $150,569.

Menard said that most of the red king crab were caught in northern Norton Sound. He credits a combination of factors for the record catch. "We see a stable red king crab population and good recruitment numbers," Menard said. "The [red king crab] population is the best in 30 years."

Menard said that the first winter red king commercial fishery opened in the winter of 1977 to 1978. The catch then was 9,625 crabs and held the record until fishermen this year blasted it.

Also contributing to the successful harvest effort was that the shelf ice was stable and weather conditions were conducive for through-the-ice crabbing without too many blizzard or stormy days.

Commercial crabbers fished in 40-ft depth and deeper. The area between the Nome River and Dredge 6 is closed to commercial fishing and was only open to subsistence crabbers.

Norton Sound Seafood Products operations manager Rich Ferry said that NSSP was obviously pleased with the season. While they sell some crabs at their store, most of the harvest goes into refrigerated packs and on to South Korea, Hong Kong and Shanghai.

Depending on the route, they are at their destination within 19 hours, Ferry said.

NSSP still has about 500 live red king crab in their holding tanks for sale at the fish plant. "This was one of the better winters," Ferry said.

The summer red king crab season will start after June 15, depending on the ice situation and buyer readiness.

The summer commercial red king crab harvest quota is set at 495,600 pounds. Of this amount, 37,170 pounds are allocated for the CDQ fishery.

A DIFFERENT CRAB— Local crab fisherman Tony Shelp pulled this Hanasaki crab (Paralithodes brevipes) out of one of his crab pots, five miles south of Sledge Island, on the last day of the crabbing season. Hanasaki Crab are mainly distributed around the Nemuro Peninsula in northern Japan, in the waters around Hokkaido.

Creating a Better SNC
"A Need for Change"

The purpose of this document is to make sure that all SNC Shareholders are made aware of what has transpired at SNC over the last 18 months, so that you can make well informed decisions regarding the direction of the Company and its leadership moving forward.

In early March of 2009, all was going very well at SNC. Under Robbie Fagerstrom's leadership, SNC was on target to have the best year in the history of the Company. Profits from SNC's 8(a) companies were expected to be over $17m, with total profits to reach $20m.

That all changed when Robbie Fagerstrom and Homer Hoogendorn sat down with Neal Foster and demanded that he resign his management responsibilities, as a result of his mismanagement of GBS (a Sitnasuak 8(a) subsidiary).

Putting their own interests ahead of SNC's Shareholders, Mr. Foster and Mr. Mike Wassmann quickly turned the table on Mr. Fagerstrom. With the help of Trudy Anderson Sobocienski and Crystal Andersen-Booth, they launched false allegations against Mr. Fagerstrom to force his resignation instead of their own, and, ultimately, to seize control of SNC's Board of Directors.

As SNC's Shareholders know all too well, the new management group then poured millions of SNC's money into the pockets of lawyers and consultants so they could pursue their baseless allegations in order to keep control of SNC. At the end of the day, despite their claims that these legal actions would lead to the recovery of millions of dollars for the Shareholders.

 SNC recovered not a penny, but instead paid out a large sum of money (May - December 2009 paid to lawyers & consultants a total of $5.2 million in fees.).

Each and every one of their allegations, has now been found to be completely false. Their principal allegation was that Mr. Fagerstrom had placed SNC's 8(a) status in jeopardy by failing to disclose to the Small Business Administration (SBA) the relationship SNC had with its Washington, DC consultant. The SBA itself has since conducted an inquiry into this very serious allegation. On May 11, 2011, the SBA's Office of General Counsel issued a letter concluding that there was no merit whatsoever to the allegations against Mr. Fagerstrom or the company's Washington, DC consultants. The following is a summary paragraph pulled from the SBA's own finding letter.

"Based on the information in the administrative record, and the information provided by you in response to my letter, I have decided to take no further action at this time. The information shows that your (Washington, DC consultants) relationship was disclosed to SBA, and that your actions and the actions of SNC were consistent with information provided to SBA."

This recent ruling from the SBA is just the latest instance of an independent organization finding that the allegations made by these Directors were baseless. Unfortunately, the damage to SNC's Shareholders had already been done. It goes well beyond the enormous legal expenses incurred by SNC in pursuit of these frivolous claims. The management decisions made by these individuals and the professional team they hired have been far more devastating. Despite the fact that 70% of SNC's profits came from its 8(a) businesses, these Directors immediately installed Trudy Anderson Sobocienski as SNC's new Chief Executive Officer as a replacement for Mr. Fagerstrom.

This was a strange choice given that Ms. Sobocienski had absolutely no experience with government contracting, a fact that had been disclosed in her "New Board Member Profile" in the VENTURE newsletter when she joined SNC just 12 months earlier. Under the direction of Mr. Foster, Mr. Wassmann and Ms. Crystal Andersen-Booth, and under the management of their hand-picked CEO, SNC has experienced undeniably devastating financial results.

The 2010 financial statements have finally revealed to SNC's Shareholders the extent of the damage caused by these individuals. In 2009, SNC's financials showed that even after incurring millions in wasted legal and consultant fees, SNC's manufacturing 8(a) companies (SNCT and API) generated Gross Sales of $240 million and Net income of $10 million dollars. In contrast, these same companies had sales of just $55 million -- and, sadly, a Net Loss of $1.7 million.

Clearly, it did not take long for this group to destroy the enormously profitable business that SNC had developed under the leadership of Mr. Fagerstrom and the SNCT Board of Managers (Helen C. Bell, Homer E. Hoogendorn and Perry T. Mendenhall). Yet, at the Shareholders meeting in May 2010, these individuals were careful to hide this financial information from SNC's Shareholders. They led Shareholders to believe things were running as smoothly and efficiently as ever, claiming credit for 2009 results based on the success of government contracts awarded before they had even come to power. What they didn't tell the Shareholders at the time was that they already knew that the ship was quickly sinking. Although they realized that something had to be done quickly, they cared more about saving face and avoiding a controversy at the May 2010 Shareholder meeting than they did about getting the issues resolved. Thus, it was not until July of 2010 that they forced Ms. Sobocienski out of the Company.

In just 18 months, Ms. Andersen - Booth, Mr. Foster and Mr. Wassmann cost SNC upwards of $20 million in profits had they not fabricated allegations against Mr. Fagerstrom and seized control of SNC. During this same time, they increased the fees they paid themselves as Board members by so much that the amount paid in one year was almost as much as the amount paid under the leadership of Mr. Fagerstrom and Mr. Hoogendorn during the three (3) year period prior to the management change.

As an example of this excess, Crystal Andersen - Booth, who worked full-time at Alaska Airlines, paid herself $91,578 for part-time work she performed at SNC in 2010.

This wouldn't be an issue had these Board members delivered value to the Shareholders, but the fact that their actions and management translated into substantial financial losses makes this even more egregious.

In summary, these four individuals (Foster, Wassmann, Anderson-Sobocienski and Andersen - Booth) appear to have consistently put their own interest ahead of the interests of SNC and Shareholders:

1. In early 2009, they fabricated allegations against Mr. Fagerstrom in order to save Mr. Foster from the resignation demanded by Mr. Fagerstrom and Mr. Hoogendorn.
2. In May 2009, they used their baseless charges to seize control of SNC's Board of Directors. Once in control, they spent millions of dollars of SNC's money on legal and consultants to pursue those allegations and keep control of SNC.
3. They chose to install as CEO someone who was inexperienced and ill-prepared for the job so that they would be able to manipulate her as they saw fit.
4. They increased substantially the fees they paid themselves, and yet delivered little or nothing of value to the company's bottom line and to the Shareholders.
5. In May 2010 they misled Shareholders to believe that operations at SNC were running as smoothly & efficiently as before, but provided no data to back this up because they knew that the data would tell a completely different story.

The truth could only be hidden for so long - the 2010 financials now show that the 8(a) companies lost $1.7 million in 2010. Now that the full devastations of their actions has been revealed, Shareholders have the opportunity to hold Ms. Andersen-Booth, Ms. Anderson - Sobocienski, Mr. Foster and Mr. Wassmann accountable.

Just one year ago, these Directors tried to purchase the goodwill of SNC's Shareholders with dividends paid out of profits earned under the leadership of Mr. Fagerstrom and Mr. Hoogendorn. Now, just twelve months later, SNC can no longer afford to pay such dividends (2011 dividend was $6.82 per-share - 2012 dividend was $7.16 and a $5.00 per-share dividend for Elders over 65 years old.) because the $10 million profit made under Mr. Fagerstrom's leadership from the 8(a) program has been turned into a -$1.7 million loss by Foster, Sobocienski, Booth and Wassmann. In addition, the recent letter from the SBA again questions the integrity of these individuals when they made their baseless allegations in order to seize control of SNC.

We hope that we have been able to educate our Shareholders about the truth regarding the false allegations and damaging management decisions made by Foster, Sobocienski, Booth and Wassmann. We strongly believe that you need to address these issues with the Board of Directors before SNC is driven into bankruptcy.

This is your Company and this is your chance to demand that these individuals (Foster, Sobocienski, Booth and Wassmann) be held accountable for their actions and the losses of the Company.

Quyanna, Robbie Fagerstrom

*Special note - This was (document) presented at the 2011 Annual Shareholders meeting, and is the reason that those minutes were tabled at the 2012 Annual Shareholders meeting - because this presentation was not mentioned or written into the Annual meeting minutes.

The State of Alaska, Banking and Securities has posted on the following link the Annual reports of all Native Corporations and is accessible by all individuals. The link as follows: www.propublica.org

The new Board leadership and Management have a track record of failure and continue to fail. The Chairman and the majority of the Board continue to support this team despite their failure. Dividends will soon be a thing of the past or greatly reduced due to lack of profits. The Shareholders have been deceived for three years straight by the current leadership by covering up their failures and keep anyone off the Board who will hold them accountable.

While profits for the Shareholders have fallen drastically the Board pays more Board fees than ever before to Board members. Board members that support the current leadership receive thousands and in some cases over the last few years tens of thousands of dollars in fees. Under Fagerstrom and Hoogendorn, even when the company was making tens of millions of dollars such fees were not awarded to Board members.

Foster and Company 82% of their Profits comes from 7(j) sharing. Since the majority of the Board refuses to take responsibility for their failings the Shareholders need to act before SNC is no longer a viable Company and all future dividends are lost.

Before our children's future is lost we must make a change!

You can restore a bright future for SNC by voting in Robbie Fagerstrom and Homer Hoogendorn.

Lemonade Day entrepreneurs ran profitable businesses

By Diana Haecker

Despite cold temperatures hovering around the freezing point, kids in Nome and the region mixed up lemonade and baked goods to sell during Lemonade Day.

In order to educate children about running a business, Lemonade Day is celebrated state and nationwide.

Although it may have been easier to sell refreshments in Florida on May 11, Nome and regional communities saw kids brave the cold and set up their lemonade stands in snow banks and on muddy gravel roads.

After business report cards trickled in to area coordinators, Nome coordinator Alice Bioff reported that Nome saw 53 stands with about 80 to 90 participants.

Kids donated to various non-profits including St Jude's Children Research Hospital, the Nome Food Bank, the Nome Elementary School cross-country team and the Nome dog pound, Bioff said.

"It's great to see kids learn to share," Bioff said.

She added she was impressed with the creativity shown not only in stand decoration and food presentation but also in offering specials.

As an example Bioff said that Nome's Macey Witrosky offered something unique: a joke with a purchase.

A Lemonade bus departed from Front Street and had a handful of lemonade day "tourists" on board, plus Lemon Head, to visit all 53 stands in Nome.

In Shishmaref, 15 kids set up stands throughout the villages and had one snow-mobile stand.

They sold popcorn balls, pink lemonade, Jell-O cups and cupcakes.

In Unalakleet there were a total of 12 stands and 24 students participated, coordinator Kathy Commack reported.

With donations from NSEDC,

West Coast Aviation Services, Grishkowsky Ventures and Kathy's Closet, the coordinators bought four bikes to raffle off among Lemonade Day stand owners.

The winners were Kael Erickson, Payton Commack, Michael Haugen and Ryder Howard.

In Brevig Mission two children set up stands inside the Bingo Hall to get out of the cold weather.

The Seetot family operated one mobile stand outside. Scott Seetot, with his mother Sara and two brothers and friend Amy Wellert, set up a mobile four-wheeler stand in front of the Brevig Mui Store.

Scott Seetot said with the money earned, he would help buy his brother a new bike.

Amy Wellert wanted to use the money earned to help her attend the summer Lutheran Bible Camp.

In Teller, 15 children participated in Lemonade Day.

Gambell and Koyuk held their Lemonade Day a week later, on Saturday, May 18.

In Koyuk, 23 children participated.

NO MORE POPCORN BALLS— Bradley, Michael and Carl Sinnok of Shishmaref were soon sold out on popcorn balls but still had pink lemonade, cupcakes and coffee cake to offer their clients.
