Iditarod: Teacher on the Trail brings Iditarod to Ohio

By Peter Loewi

Fresh out of graduate school, Jim Deprez got a job as a substitute teacher. One of the lessons he was asked to cover for this second-grade class was on the Iditarod, and he saw the kids get hooked. Ever since, he said, he's been turning what was once a two-week lesson into two months of interdisciplinary learning. The kids love it, and "I'm always learning more," said Deprez, now a 3rd grade teacher in Hilliard, Ohio.

Deprez has been teaching about the Iditarod for 15 years and has been the Teacher on the Trail for two years. The program, which started in 1999, brings a Lower 48 educator to Alaska for the race, and the teacher reports from the trail. Deprez writes two or three Iditarod-themed posts a month during the year, and then daily blog posts during the race. In his first year, he wrote about "Moments with Musher," learning about – and sharing – the history and the changes that have happened over time. He has covered "Misconceptions and More," helping people figure out the details, such as the difference between the Widow's Lamp and the Red Lantern, or why the trail starts in Seward.

This year, he has focused on the volunteers, sharing behind-the-scenes stories of the people who make the race happen. "Without the volunteers, this race would not happen," he said. Deprez has spoken with trail breakers, checkers, veterinarians, the Iditarod Air Force, race judges, photographers, search and rescue, and more. Every time, at the bottom of one of his posts, which can be found online at the Iditarod Education page, he leaves a lesson idea for teachers following the race. "That's been really cool to have that interaction with teachers from all over the country, especially during the race. Lots of teachers have reached out and asked questions," he said.

After two years of COVID and the Iditarod, Deprez will be handing off the ceremonial sleeping bag to another, yet-to-be-determined, teacher at the Iditarod Summer Educator Conference, which happens around musher sign-ups and the volunteer picnic. In the summer of 2020, there was no handoff, and one day he found that a duffel bag had arrived in the mail for him. To save teachers from having to go out and purchase everything new every year, he explained, the duffel contains a sleeping bag, a head lamp, a selfie stick, wifi hotspot, air mattress, and other essentials for teachers on trails.

His successor hasn't been announced yet, but he already has advice for them: "Get out and do as much as possible!" Many of the opportunities he had were because he was walking around. For example, he was out for a walk and bumped into Barbara Moore, Red Lantern winner of 1980, who arranged for him to experience a dog sled ride. At the chute he saw Aliy Zirkle, who said that 2022 was her easiest ever trip to Nome. "So many cool little tidbits and amazing little stories! Get out, experience everything, do as much as possible, and take advantage of every minute out here," Deprez said.

Deprez's lessons to his students over the last 15 years have been a big hit. One of his students even hooked up the family pug, Chubs, to lead a line of stuffed animals, pretending that they were mushing. "The kids love it!" he said.

Just as all the fans had been glued to the tracker, Deprez's family back home was, too. During the race, his wife sent him a picture of their 10-year-old explaining how the tracker works to their 5-year-old and grandfather. "It is a generational thing, and now they're a lot more interested. It just takes that initial spark and then it spreads," Deprez explained.

"I wish the EDU part would spread even further to help spread Iditarod to everybody because it's so unique," he said. While teaching during COVID has opened up such opportunities as virtual field trips to Denali to learn about sled dogs, it is getting harder for teachers to get permission to take the time off to follow the race. Schools and school districts are trending towards using test scores as a metric, taking Iditarod innovations out of the curriculum.

But Deprez says that the Iditarod can be used to teach many of the subjects which students end up being tested on, and not just geography or history. He explained that at his school, they have programmable robots called Ozobots, which follow lines. Deprez makes a large copy of the Iditarod map, then asks students to write code based on what mushers might actually do along the trail. "Going up Rainy Pass, they might have the bot slow down because it's slow climbing up the mountain and then coming down Dalzell, they might have it go really fast. There's a pause for three seconds if the musher is doing their 24-hour lay-over. The kids love to do the zigzag going across the Bering Sea ice, slipping. They get really creative about what the Bot can do at certain points of the race based on what actually does happen, which is pretty cool. There's so much out there that you can do," he said.

"Iditarod is so naturally integrated into everything that it's not forced, it's a natural way to help teach these standards. Then it develops that passion with the kids, and for me, that's the ultimate goal," he said.

The Teacher on the Trail program started in 1998/99 after Andrea AufderHeyde, known as Finney, a second-grade teacher in Bloomington, Indiana, approached the Iditarod about her idea for it, explained Director of Education Jane Holmes. Holmes, who was herself once a Teacher on the Trail, said "We've never had a teacher from Alaska on the trail, and we would love to have one!"

The Iditarod Art Show returns

The 21st Iditarod Fine Art Show, sponsored by the Nome Arts Council, was back in person after a two-year absence due to COVID cancellations of Iditarod events. This year's show, comprised of 86 entries from Nome and the surrounding region, was held at Old St. Joe's Hall Monday, March 14 through Saturday the 19th.

The judges Joy Berger of Anchorage, DeeDee Jonrowe of Willow and Lisa Leeper of Nome were amazed by the delightful sampling of creative community talent.

An art reception was held Friday, March 18 from 5-7 P.M. The public enjoyed refreshments while Angela Hansen, art show organizer, extended a welcome, thanked the participants and recognized Christina Perrigo, Nora Nagarak, Lisa Leeper and members of the Nome Arts Council, who directly helped with the show.

Hansen announced the winners while Marguerite LaRiviere, President of the Nome Arts Council, shook their hands as they came forward to accept their prize money. The votes for the People's Choice Award were tallied and this year there was a tie between the stained-glass walrus - "Staying Afloat" by Chloe Mattheis and the knitted qiviut "Baby Boy Aviator Sweater" by Loretta Bullard.

Artist Karen Olanna, who sponsors the Patrice Shook Best Animal Awards, announced a new recognition that she wanted to bestow. It is the "Delores Orman Volunteer Spirit Award," in memory and honor of Hansen's mother who passed away last August. Delores graciously assisted with the art show regularly since it began in 1999 and her helping hand and ready smile have already been missed. The award recipients are Ben Jack, Eve Mendenhall and Lisa Leeper. They were selected for their extra kindness and effort in setting up both the art and craft show held at Old St. Joe's last week.

This concluded the ceremony and artists picked up their works on Saturday. It is always a delight to see what people are creating in Nome and never too soon to start working on new entries for next year's show.

US Army Corps of Engineers Announces Northeast Cape Public Meeting

The U.S. Army Corps of Engineers (USACE), Alaska District announces a public meeting to present the findings of the Second Five-Year Review and Periodic Reviews for the Northeast Cape Formerly Used Defense Site (FUDS) on St. Lawrence Island, and to present proposed 2022 field work. The Five-Year Review addressed cleanup activities regulated under the Comprehensive Environmental Response, Compensation and Liability Act (CERCLA), while the Periodic Review addressed sites that are solely petroleum contaminated and not regulated by CERCLA.

Environmental concerns at the Northeast Cape FUDS are divided among 34 sites. Remedies to address environmental concerns were documented in two Decision Documents in 2009. The remedies were implemented from 2010-2014. The Five-Year and Periodic Review process evaluates the implementation and performance of the selected remedies and determines whether these remedies remain protective of human health and the environment. The reviews found the following:

Protectiveness Determinations

Protective – Sites 1, 21, 31, and 32 are protective, and therefore are recommended for No Further Action. Site 28 has met the remedial action objectives for the site under CERCLA.

Will Be Protective – Sites 3, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, 13, 15, 16, 19, and 27 will be protective upon full completion of the remedy, which includes the filing of a Deed Notice.

Short Term Protective – Sites 8, 15, and 28 require additional action related to residual petroleum contamination.

Planned 2022 Field Work

Petroleum-contaminated soil will be further delineated at Site 8. Maintenance and sampling of groundwater wells will be conducted at the former Main Operations Complex. Residual petroleum-contaminated soil will be excavated and removed from Site 15. Dredging will be utilized to remove petroleum-contaminated sediment at Site 28. Roads, land use control signs, and the Site 7 landfill gravel cap will be maintained.

Detailed information concerning the Northeast Cape FUDS cleanup efforts is available at three information repositories:
