Alaska Revenue Commissioner Adam Crum to quit, expected to run for governor

By James Brooks,
Alaska Beacon

Adam Crum, commissioner of the Alaska Department of Revenue, will leave his job Aug. 8, according to an announcement published Friday by Gov. Mike Dunleavy's office.

A person familiar with Crum's plans said he intends to run for governor in 2026, joining seven other Republican candidates. No independents or Democrats have filed for the primary election, which is 13 months away.

Asked whether he will run for governor, Crum said by text message, "I've accomplished a lot to put Alaska on sound economic footing. I'll have a formal statement on my last day, August 8th. Stay tuned."

Crum has been part of Dunleavy's cabinet since the governor took office in 2018. He initially served as commissioner of the Alaska Department of Health and Social Services, occupying that position during the COVID-19 pandemic and during an executive order that split the agency into two separate departments.

In 2022, Dunleavy named Crum as revenue commissioner, and he assumed a seat on the board of the Alaska Permanent Fund Corp., whose revenues are the No. 1 source of general-purpose dollars for state services and the Permanent Fund dividend.

Jason Brune, former commissioner of the Alaska Department of Environmental Conservation, now fills a public seat on the Permanent Fund Corp. board.

Brune said he knows Crum has been considering a run for governor but could not confirm his plans.

"His departure is a big loss for the state," Brune said by text.

"It was an honor working with him for the five years we served together," he said, referring to the time they spent on the Dunleavy cabinet.

In a written statement Dunleavy praised Crum's performance during his time with the state.

"Commissioner Crum has been an exemplary leader whose unwavering dedication and innovative approach have significantly benefited Alaskans," Dunleavy said. "During his time leading both the Department of Health and Social Services and the Department of Revenue, Adam consistently prioritized Alaska's economic well-being, public health, and fiscal stability. His collaborative spirit and commitment to serving our communities have made a lasting, positive impact."

The governor's office said an acting commissioner will be named soon.

U.S. Coast Guard responds to Chinese Research Vessel off Alaska

JUNEAU, Alaska — The U.S. Coast Guard detected and responded to the China-flagged research ship Xue Long 2 on the U.S. Extended Continental Shelf in the U.S. Arctic, approximately 290 nautical miles north of Utqiagvik, Alaska, Friday.

A Coast Guard C-130J Hercules fixed wing aircraft from Air Station Kodiak responded to the Xue Long 2, an icebreaker operated by the Polar Research Institute of China and 130 nautical miles inside the ECS boundary.

The U.S. has exclusive rights to conserve and manage the living and non-living resources of its ECS.

"The U.S. Coast Guard, alongside partners and other agencies, vigilantly monitors and responds to foreign government vessel activity in and near U.S. waters to secure territorial integrity and defend sovereign interests against malign state activity," said Rear Adm. Bob Little, Commander of the U.S. Coast Guard Arctic District.

The C-130J aircraft was operating under Coast Guard Arctic District's Operation Frontier Sentinel, which is designed to meet presence with presence in response to adversary activity in or near Alaskan waters.

Alaska governor allows bills on fishing and accounting to become laws

By James Brooks,
Alaska Beacon

Gov. Mike Dunleavy allowed three bills to become law this week without his signature, creating two fishing-related laws and one that updates the rules governing accountants in the state.

Under the Alaska constitution, a governor may sign a bill into law, veto it or allow it to become law by taking no action on it after it is transmitted to him by the Legislature.

House Bill 31, from Rep. Louise Stutes, R-Kodiak, eliminates a state law that required fishing boats to register with the Alaska Division of Motor Vehicles every three years. Now, any boat that's actively in use fishing and registered with the Commercial Fisheries Entry Commission and the U.S. Coast Guard will not have to also register with the DMV.

In a written statement, Stutes said the DMV registration — passed by the Legislature in 2018 — turned out to be excessive, particularly in rural Alaska.

"A lot of these communities don't even have a DMV. Alaska's commercial fishing industry is facing historically challenging times, and I'm glad we could implement this small step to make getting started for the year a little easier," she said in the statement.

The second fishing-related bill was House Bill 116, which allows commercial fishing cooperatives to act like insurance without being regulated like insurance.

In some cases, fishing boat owners create pools of money to act as insurance funds to pay liability and damage claims themselves, bypassing the high rates charged by insurance companies.

Three pools already exist in Alaska but are organized under Washington state law because Alaska did not permit them. The new law enables pools under Alaska law, encouraging a cheaper alternative to traditional insurance.

House Bill 121, which also became law this week, lowers the training requirement for new accountants if they can substitute experience for classroom time. It also aligns some state accounting laws with model legislation used in other states.
